Hair Bobbing Fad Gets to Japan Via Movies

Tokyo.—Modern ideas are breaking into the last stronghold of old custom in Japan, and Miss Geisha, whose slight body has been the bulwark of tradition, is longing for bobbed hair.

So startling is this phenomenon to constituted authority that a police edict has been issued in Tokyo that any geisha who appears in public with her coiffure arranged in any but old style Japanese will forfeit her professional license.

The blame for the desire of the geishas is placed upon moving pictures.

Outside geisha ranks girls are dispensing with old-style coiffures. White-resses are smiling beneath hair smoothed high over huge "rats," in a style known as "harikara," a word adapted from the phrase "high collar," and signifying "in the latest mode."

Flappers in high schools are bobbing. Housewives have discovered the advantages of "buns" tucked in and fastened with hairpins.

Their Duty to Watch for Strayed Travelers

The official title of a small group of young men who watch for lost travelers in the mountain passes of Switzerland during the winter is "Soldiers of the Snow." These soldiers are young Italians who live on the Italian side of the pass. They are exempted from military service, even in case of war, on condition that they aid all lost travelers on the mountain passes. They are supplied with uniforms to distinguish them from smugglers, but not with guns. Their duties are the same as those of the monks of the hospice with whom they are in constant communication by telephone. During the long winter they watch all Swiss and Italian slopes of the pass for strayed travelers, hundreds of whom have been saved from a lingering death in the snow. At some seasons of the year the snow is all melted and the traffic route through St. Bernard's pass is open.

Saved by Coffin

Clinging to a coffin for 15 hours on a storm-swept rock off the New Zealand coast was the experience of five Maoris. They were taking the body of a relative to Nelson for burial, when the launch was wrecked on a submerged rock. The Maoris spent 15 hours on the rock in bitterly cold weather, doggedly clinging to the coffin all the time. They were in the last stages of exhaustion when rescued.

Tosses Baby From Fire

Stoughton.—Tossed by his mother from the second-story window of their burning cottage to the outstretched arms of his father on the ground below, two-year-old Herbert Carney of 43 Emerson street, South Boston, was the only one to escape injuries when fire destroyed their summer home on the shore of Glen Echo lake, forcing seven vacationists to leap from upper windows.
