Cross-Word Puzzles

Boon to Golf Widow

It already has been suggested that crossword puzzles are the almost providential and overdue instruments of vengeance ready to the hands of wives who have long suffered from golfing husbands. The fact that a wife is daily getting bogey for the solution of puzzles in the newspaper points the moral further. The golf widow can now be tied with the crossword puzzle widower.
Evening conversations in the home should begin to have two sides and should run somewhat as follows:
"Sorry to be late for dinner, dear. Had to get in 15 holes."
"You're not late. Dinner's not ready yet. Had to fill in the last 15 squares in my puzzle."
"Well, that's all right. I had a great game. Made bogey on two holes. Say, do you realize what bogey is on the fourth?"
"Eleven, isn't it?"
"Wait! Eleven strokes?"
"No, silly. Eleven minutes for the fourth puzzle."
"I'm talking about golf."
"But let me tell you about the third puzzle I worked on today. It has the sweetest interlock!"
"Shush! On the fourteenth I had Jeff one down and—"
"Two across. Now it's time you're listening to me after all these years of golf monologue. Lend an ear. On the sixteenth square across I was, as you might say, in a trap to think of a word of five letters meaning a Tyrolean outcry. What do you know? It was 'yodel.' After that I foisted a personal pronoun and got lost in the rough of the lower left-hand corner. Well, I got out of trouble, but it cost me three minutes."
"Wow! A lot of drive! You ought to have seen me today after I'd sliced—"
"—sharpened it and addressed the—"
"—with the deuce of a pretty niblick I—"
"—guessed the word was 'orthogonal'—"
"—after which I sunk a long—"
"—key word. One minute to play!"
"—Blah!"
"—Blah yourself!"
(A tribute of half an hour's silence.)
"Well, my dear, what's the latest dirt on the neighbors?"
"It's quite interesting, dear. I'll be glad to tell you. But first tell me what the boss said down at the office today."—Fairfax Downey, in New York Herald-Tribune.

Giant Salt-Cellar

The Palestine government proposes to erect a plant for the recovery of 30 odd billion tons of salt from the Dead sea—a giant salt-cellar of apparently unlimited capacity—and very soon huge chemical factories and warehouses will be established round the lake, and the peace and quiet of centuries will give place to the ceaseless whirl of wheels.
It is remarkable that one of the most desolate spots in the world should suddenly acquire such tremendous economic importance. Of all the billion tons of salt in the Dead sea, only about ten tons is common salt. The remainder consists of salts of potassium and magnesium, an abundance of which will make Palestine the richest potash country in the world.
In appearance this strange sea challenges the Mediterranean with its clarity and blueness, but so deathly still are its waters that they have earned it its grewsome name.

Finding New Power

Although their progress is slow and unspectacular, scientists are making dogged attempts to discover a way to make artificial fuels which will replace the diminishing supplies of coal and oil. The process they seek to perform in their laboratories, according to Popular Mechanics Magazine, is the marvelous one that nature uses every day in storing up energy in leaves and plants by converting waste material into wood, etc., under the action of sunlight. Solution of the riddle is being sought in California by Dr. Herman A. Spoehr and a staff of research workers. A year's consumption of coal at the present time represents the accumulation of 100 years, he says.

Vienna Exports Coins

The output of the Vienna mint in 1924 was the greatest since its foundation, according to a report of the budget committee of the national assembly. Only a comparatively few of the coins struck, however, were for Austrian account, the bulk going to Poland, Bulgaria, North and East Africa and even Afghanistan, in the shape of the old Maria Theresa dollar. Altogether, the Vienna mint turned out 341,000,000 coins, calling for 7,000 pounds of silver every day of the year.

Advancement in Tibet

The butter-burning lamps of Lhasa, forbidden city of Tibet, soon will be no more. Their place will be taken, even in the most sacred shrines, by electric lamps, and electricity to light these lamps will be generated by a hydro-electric plant that is now making its way on the backs of pack mules along trails reaching from the Indian border.

The Law's Delay

The longest lawsuit I have ever heard of is one that was started in the Ninth century—and it is still going on! It crops up periodically in the republic of Andorra, in the Pyrenees, and relates to some property referred to in a contract drawn up over 1,000 years ago. The laws of Andorra are in a somewhat undecided state, and there is no immediate prospect of the case being settled. The lawsuit is thus about a thousand years old.—Tit-Bits.

The Thrifty and conservative buyer is making preparations for the greatest of annual events. Christmas. The ones most dear to the heart expect and receive enduring remembrance for this Day of Days.

Gifts that serve, practical, lasting, useful ones, are those that reduce the physical efforts, give a measure of convenience, and gratify the user. The Electrical Industry has developed and expanded the list of useful presents as no other business has done, and a variety of articles and devices of the Electrical kind offers the purchaser unlimited advantages to buy serviceable presents at prices within the reach of every one.
