In selecting fruits for the Oregon home orchard those with which the grower is familiar and likes are naturally the first choice. If adapted to the climate and other conditions then they are in order, says the experiment station, whether rated as first class commercial fruit or not. The person to be satisfied is the home owner, not a more or less fastidious public.

Back comes the McNary-Haugen Farm Relief bill. Agriculture in general and mid-western agriculture in particular, is roused and the battle for Federal aid is to continue. For the sixth time this measure is to demand the attention of Congress and the President—and unless all signs fail the next Congress will again put it up to the President to give agriculture some sort of relief or assistance, else have the party face a vital issue in the 1928 election.

Concluding a strenuous two-day session, in which agricultural leaders representing farm organizations from a dozen mid-western and Southern states participated, the Northwestern Agricultural Conference at St. Paul last week passed a resolution demanding that the McNary-Haugen Farm Relief Bill be enacted into law at the next session of Congress. Further, another resolution was unanimously adopted requesting the House Committee on Agriculture to meet before the regular session of Congress and have the McNary-Haugen bill ready for introduction when Congress convenes.

Senator Brookhart of Iowa, Congressman O. J. Kvade of Minnesota and many members of Congress from mid-western and southern states were among the speakers at the conference and virtually all urged unremitting effort to gain "full equality for agriculture. It was declared the administration had "clearly repudiated the platform on which it was elected" in its failure to give relief.

So with our Flood Relief—Farm Relief; Bankers laying a barrage or the groundwork for tariff revision "downward" (scheduled immediately after election) and the usual presidential year manoeuvring of party leaders, the December session of Congress promises to be merry.

Last Sunday a large party occupied the city park for the purpose of celebrating a family reunion. Those taking part were from various parts of the state and some of them visited Dayton for the first time. During the course of their stay here, which lasted the better part of the day, they very much wished to see the relics the blockhouse contained, and of course it was locked and the key could not be located.

We readily know the reason why it is locked and no interest taken to show the out-of-town visitor thru it. It is because it is so confounded dirty in there that a white man dare not go in with the expectations of ever coming out looking anything like himself. But out of town people want to see these things when they are paying our city a visit, and this particular party, which was a large one, ran all over town to find some one who had a key to get into the building. Had they known the condition inside it is quite probable that they would not have wanted the key so badly.

We have been trying for a long time to draw the out-of-town visitor to our city and this is a sample of the reception they receive when they do come. Our suggestion is to put the blockhouse in a respectable shape and keep it that way and take a pride in it, or else give it to some other city within the county who will.

The tourist travel is on. Those who slaved hard for the past ten or eleven months are away on their vacation and looking up places that will afford them some pleasure—and Dayton is "sitting pretty." Our highways are (not yet) well signed to tell the traveler what we have here to show them, such as Bauer's water lily farm, Hirter's camping grounds, the city park, the old historic blockhouse, and other places of interest. Our camp ground is (not yet) complete where these travelers might stop for the night and leave the next morning with the resolution that they will return on their next vacation trip. What are you going to do about these things? Are you going to wait until snow flies and then say that it should have been done?

A very good and well known and prominent Salem man came to the office of The Statesman Thursday to say something ought to be done to include the makers of booze as accessories before the fact in the prosecution of the unfortunate and weak woman who now cowers before the bar of justice with a long prison term staring her in the face. Because, says this man, the makers of the hellish stuff that befuddled her mind and sent this weak sister out on her trail of involuntary murder are more guilty than she is of the crime that sent a good young man to his untimely grave.—Statesman.

We are informed that both President Coolidge and Vice-President Dawes were fairly deluged with fishing tackle as gifts when they announced their vacation plans. We might mention here that "our" vacation starts week after next.

Federal agents caught three New Jersey bootleggers who dumped sour mash in a stream which killed the fish. Evidently "dead fish tell tales."

Food by radio now. At least the static nut in our neighborhood said he got Hamburg and Java the other night.

FILL ON NEWBERG BRIDGE APPROACH BEGUN

Fill Will Replace Old Wooden Structure. Inter-County Span to Have Laminated Deck; Ferry Now Operating.

Earl L. McNutt, contractor, yesterday began construction of the new 600 foot fill which will replace an equal amount of wooden approach to the Newberg bridge over the Willamette river, it was reported by County Commissioner J. E. Smith who spent the day in the northern end of the county inspecting work on the bridge, and paving and other county road work at Aurora, all in Marion County.

The Newberg bridge, when it is re-opened to travel about September 1, will have all new timbers in the new approach, shortened 600 feet by the new dirt fill, the main portion spanning the river will have been reinforced with new steel, and it will have a new laminated deck of two-by-fours laid on edge.

According to the Engineer W. J. Culver, such a decking will outlast a flat deck by several months, and perhaps even years. And the structure is stronger and does not easily roughen, since the timber is laid edgewise to traffic.

At the present time a ferry in operation five hundred feet above the bridge site is handling traffic over the Woodburn-Newberg route. Repairs on the bridge which will total above $30,000, will be apportioned to Marion and Yamhill counties.

SMALL COMMUNITIES DEVELOP

Just as the country towns and smaller cities hold the preponderance of newspaper circulation in the nation, so the thousands of smaller industries of these towns hold the preponderance of payrolls and general production, except in a few highly specialized industries, remarks the Pantagraph, of Bloomington, Ill.

This remarkable industrial growth has taken place largely within the past twenty-five years, and has been concurrent with the far-reaching development of electrical power and distribution. Large power plants at central points are linked to far remote places, to smaller towns and even to the open country regions. All this tends to result in men employed in industry being able more and more to find homes where they can have more of the comforts of life than they could in the congested centers of the great cities. Electricity contributes to the recreational facilities of smaller communities, and tied up with the auto and radio, its younger brothers, provide all the advantages of the large city to the country dwellers.

The industrial output of smaller cities and "country towns" is gradually surpassing in volume the output of the great centers of population.

Summer cultivation of the Oregon prune orchard is shallow, 2 or 3 inches, as recommended by the production committee at the O. A. C. meeting of the Northwest Dried Prune convention, and frequent enough to keep the weeds down. Less frequent tillage is needed as the season advances, and none at all after the middle of July in non-bearing orchards. Only shallow summer tillage implements such as Acme, Kimball or spike-tooth harrow are used.

What ever became of the old-fashioned girl who used to spend Saturday mornings breathing into lamp chimneys and cleaning them with an old newspaper?

Anyway the pessimist doesn't enrage you by looking on the bright side when you are having a good time being a martyr.
