The Close of School

When you were a school-boy, or school-girl, a red letter day of the year was when school was dismissed for the summer vacation. It mattered not if you were one of the ones who like to go to school. There are such girls and an occasional boy of the same kind. The attitude of the pupils at the closing of the school year will not be misunderstood by those who have not forgotten their own feelings under similar circumstances. There is eagerness to lay aside books and pencils and rest from the routine which has been the order for many months.

The suggestion which is sometimes made that the school year should be continuous and that the summer vacation, if granted at all, should be short, gets mighty little indorsement from those whom it would affect chiefly. Even the teachers we imagine would not wish to surrender the weeks of relaxation though it might mean a little more pay.

The average boy in the grades regards school as a species of punishment inflicted on him because he cannot help himself. It is the exception for the boy to hold it needful to do more than will "get him by." This may not be the ideal boy, but it is somewhere near the description of the normal boy. When the boy lands in the high school, ambition may burgeon, but the small boy who is too studious is likely to be regarded as catering to the prize of being the teacher's pet and that in the average estimate is nothing but a disgrace.

It is well that parents and school authorities have views somewhat at variance with the pupils, else school rooms would not be filled to the extent they are. Were it not so there would be longer vacations and shorter school terms. It happens that so long as children are in the grades, the parents know what is best for them. When the children get into college the situation may be reversed and the children know what is best for parents. At least there is some practice on that theory.

Fish "Shocked" Away

An application of electricity whereby fish are literally "shocked" away and saved from destruction by the turbine wheels of hydroelectric plants has recently been developed in Oregon.

The device is made up of two parallel rows of electrodes suspended from a wooden framework, one over the surface of the water and one near the bottom. When the current is turned on, an electric field is set up, reaching from the top to the bottom of the stream. Its strength decreases with distance up-and-down-stream.

When a fish swims into the edge of the electric field, it is usually turned back. If it continues, an increasingly severe shock drives it back. It is reported that a field current of three or four volts will discourage a 30-pound salmon, but that the fish will not be harmed even if it swims entirely through the field.

A True Story

McDonald and McLaren had dined with a number of friends at a high-priced restaurant. The rest of the party had managed to leave before the check was presented. The two remaining Scotsmen sat on hour after hour, trying to appear nonchalant. McDonald at last excused himself to phone his wife, "Don't be alarmed, dear, if I don't get home tonight, I'm in a deadlock." When he returned to the table he found a note from McLaren, "Verra sorry I had to hurry off, McDonald, but take my advice and be sparing with the tip. You ken you did the biggest share of the waiting."

Lawrence, a sister of Mr. Ferguson and a member of the 1928 class, had the honor of giving the valedictory. Her oration, written upon the class motto "Not Evening but Dawn" was excellent and was given in a very pleasing manner. Miss Lawrence was also awarded the scholarship which was given. Consequently the Fergusons came home very proud over the honors which had been bestowed upon their sister.

The Passing of Dr. Wood

Amid floral tokens unnumbered, the body of Dr. James Thomas Wood was laid to rest in the Amity cemetery on Friday, the 8th of June. No one man was better known in Yamhill county than he. Few homes but knew the tall form of him who came to help the ill. No road but has felt the tread of his horses' hoofs or the sound of his car. No day too stormy or night too dark and cold but the ready of "Yes, I'll come," could be relied upon. Many homes have received not only medical aid but financial as well, when unable to procure the necessary nourishment for the sick. After the attending physicians could do no more the usual reflection was "Why don't you call Dr. Wood?" His clinic was principally for consultation and diagnosis. His reputation for the latter was unquestioned.

Not a man entered the social hall who was more entertaining. Books of the best literature especially open books of poetry were ever present on his desk, that a moment of leisure might not be lost. God gave him the form but he was what is called a self made man.

We regret his last suffering. We feel his place will be long vacant. Rest, Dr. Wood, surely thy crown has been well earned, rest.

By Maud Williamson.

The Open Window

Some little time ago, a distinguished admiral of the American fleet raced across the continent in order to reach, if possible, in time, the bedside of his mother who lay dying in a little town in Maine. She died before he got there, at the age of ninety-two, and in the same house in which she had been born. It is a small world in every sense. When this venerable lady was a little girl, Lincoln was still splitting rails in New Salem; Chicago was a tiny village clustering around Fort Dearborn, while all beyond was wilderness. Not a single one of the great cities of the West was thought of. Not a single one of the 11,000,000 who lost their lives in the Great War had yet been born. But the world is smaller even than that. The present writer, still a long way, as a human life is accounted, from the "allotted span," was as a child taught to read by a much loved grand-mother who was born while Washington was still president of the United States, and the passing of Poor Richard in Philadelphia was still being talked about. Napoleon was still an unknown captain of artillery and thousands of those who were to fall at Waterloo were still unborn.
