WHAT A BANKER THINKS ABOUT MINING

The president of a large national bank in Chicago was under criticism by the presidents of several other banks because of his investments in mines. This man made the following reply to the criticism:

"Throughout the West, ages ago, Almighty God built stronger vaults in His granite banks than we have in ours. He filled His vaults with gold, silver and copper. He gave the prospector knowledge and insight, and guided him on his way to the door of the vaults He had built. The federal government handed him a title patent to all therein. It is not a crime, but a virtue to enter. With drill, blast, pick and spade the prospectors have broken the combination locks and entered. But for him our notes of issue would be as the stump-tailed currency of 1857. But for him this government of ours would be bankrupt.

"Mines will be producing millions of gold, silver and copper in that future day when national banks are unknown.

"A mine contains a crop already raised, harvested and on deposit for you to check against at your pleasure.

"The wealth gathered from the mines immortalized King Solomon.

"Mining has made the United States the richest country in the world.

"Mining is an industry as necessary to the welfare of the community as the raising of crops.

"Show me a country without mines and I will show you a people sunk in degradation and poverty; and poverty makes cowards of nations as well as individuals.

"Mining is the second industry in the United States.

"Mining has transformed more poor men into millionaires and raised them to positions of honor and trust than any other business.

"Mining has scored less than 35 per cent of failures against 95 per cent of failures shown in general merchandising business of the United States.

"Without the products of the mines you would have neither a frying pan, a spoon, a hat pin or a monetary circulating medium.

"Eliminate the miner and you set civilization back to the dark ages.

"Outside of the element of great personal profit which will accrue to us as bankers who are able to supply the money to open great mines, it behooves us to foster an industry upon which the prosperity of not alone our depositors, but of the entire nation depends."

TOWN LOYALTY

(Editorial in Vernonia Eagle)

No citizen is so powerful, none so humble, but what his town is an aid to him in some way or other. There is where he employs his labor or his capital, builds his home, enjoys the society of his kind and, in short finds everything that makes life worth the living. Failing to find these things he usually goes in search of them elsewhere. If he remains it is natural to suppose he has found that which he sought.

Since your town boasts you why not do as well by it as it does by you? To progress it needs the help of every citizen, and every citizen benefits individually from every community improvement, whether that improvement take the form of public works, population growth, increased prosperity or business development.

No community is so miserable and unattractive that it has not its boosters and none so perfect it has not its knockers, but that city or town achieves most in civic betterment which has the most boosters.

There are boosters and many of them in Vernonia. They and their forerunners have made it the fine community it is and are making it the better community all want it to be in the future. But there are two reasons why every citizen should be a civic worker and booster. First, it is unfair to place the whole burden upon a few, and second, every citizen owes it to himself and his fellow citizens to do everything within his power to make the community better that it may the better serve all.

However, one should not make the mistake of confining his boasting to talking about the virtues of his home town. Direct advertising pays, but the kind of boasting that pays the highest dividends is sober and preserving endeavor of the kind that builds and beautifies the community.

HIGHWAY SIGNS

(Editorial in Coquille Sentinel)

Right along the same line as the Port Orford and other chambers of commerce in southwestern Oregon have been working to have bill and signboards removed from along the Roosevelt highway, the Portland Garden club has begun an active campaign to have signboards removed from the scenic portions of all highways in the state and restricted to commercial districts where they belong. The dream may be Utopian, but it is the desire of every nature lover to see these hideous monstrosities obliterated. An awakened public sentiment is the only means which can force these signboards away from the highways.

Kiddies' Evening Story

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

The Puppies

I want to tell you a story about a dog who had five most beautiful little puppies. They were very tiny black and white puppies, and their mother was so proud of them.

Now, her master was moving away to another place, and a new man had bought his home. This person seemed, to the dog's master, like a very nice, kind man.

At once he seemed to take a great fancy to the little puppies and their mother.

So their master suggested that he should keep the dogs, for he was moving to a village ten miles away and had to go over very rough roads.

He decided that the trip would be very bad for the mother dog and the puppies.

Dogs are very loyal to the first person they love and who cares for them.

It is very seldom that a dog is happy with another master when the first one has been good to him.

The master pretended to the dog that he was just going for a walk and said good-by as usual, or rather, he tried to say it in his way.

But the dog knew that her master was sad, and she had noticed the other man about the place.

She knew that something was the matter, and as soon as her master started off she set up the most pathetic wail.

The next day toward evening, as the master was sitting in his new house, a little whimper which sounded most familiar greeted his ears.

"Where could it come from?" he thought. He opened the door and there stood his dog looking so tired and worn.

She snuggled down by him, for she was so tired she couldn't jump up, as was her custom.

But after a moment or two of petting she gave all the signs which meant he was to follow her, and outside under a vine on the stoop of the house, were the five little puppies, for she had not been able to leave them behind.

"You poor, loyal, tired doggie!" said her master. "You and your precious puppies will never be left again."

The dog understood perfectly that she was welcome with her family, and that she never would be given to another master.

But in the meantime the telephone rang, and the other man telephoned to say that after her master had left the night before the dog had commenced her journey after him, each trip taking a puppy with her.

The people along the road had seen this from their windows and didn't know what it could mean until the man explained that she must have gone back to her master.

When the master heard this he was more touched than ever, and told the man that, after all, he would keep his dogs.
