How Nature Appealed to Fashion Designers

"I never saw anything like it! It was wonderful! Such color! I seemed to stand on a wall of taupe, fading away to a dim olive ecru in the distance, while on my left was a cathedral of golden airdale, touched with aloma, antique, and ashes of roses with just a suggestion of bamboo and beaver. And in the distance walls upon walls of blonde, brick-dust, heather and brunette reflected the dying sun in a thousand tints of nutria, gamboge, honeydew and horse-chestnut!

"And always the colors seemed to change and blend. Kit fox faded to wild honey and died away into vandyke; Spanish gold blushed and became tangerine, the sun kissed it and it became sherry deepening into jockey; glowing monkey skin became morning glory, became straw, became nut, became oyster, became pigeon, became popcorn and sweetpea, only to blend into a riot of brown sugar and verdigris. Flesh cliffs changed to nude and softened to French nude.

"I tell you it was wonderful. If I don't get a new shade of silk hose out of it I miss my guess!"—Kansas City Times.

Various Ideas as to Spots on Moon's Face

There exist in various parts of the world curious ideas regarding the dark spots in the moon's disk in the eastern part of Asia the spots are believed to be a rabbit or hare. The Chinese, in particular, regard them as a hare sitting up and pounding rice in a mortar. Siamese take the same view. Others see in the moon a man and woman working in a field.

Curiously, the North American Indians have almost the same superstition as the Chinese. On old monuments in Central America the moon appears as a jug or vessel, out of which an animal like a rabbit is jumping. South American Indians, on the other hand, believe that a girl, who had fallen in love with the moon, sprang toward it, was caught and kept by it, and that it is her figure which is seen on the moon's face.

Samoa Islanders regard the spots as representing a woman carrying a child. Other southern people have similar beliefs, the woman and child sometimes being altered into an old woman bearing a burden on her back.

Arthur's "Round Table"

The table which is now called "The Round Table of King Arthur" is to be seen in the Great Hall at Winchester, England, part of the old castle there. At the west end of this hall, above the remains of the royal dais, hangs this table, 17 feet in diameter. It is known to have existed in the Thirteenth century and is possibly older, and was repainted in the reign of Henry VIII. Of course there is no way of tracing any connection of King Arthur and his knights with this table. This table is divided off into places for the king and 24 of his knights. According to one version of the King Arthur legends, there were 13 seats around the table, while according to another there were 30 seats, and the total number of knights of King Arthur was 140.

Navaho Blankets

The Smithsonian Institution says: "The Yebechal are nature gods of the Navaho whose chief function is healing the sick. The so-called Yebechal 'dances' is a ceremony for this purpose. Up to some years ago representations of the gods were painted in colored sand at the ceremony and wiped out at the close. Later, the Navaho began to weave the Yebechal figures in rugs for sale. These rugs are usually made on a hand loom. This may easily be told if the designs are alike on both sides as to form and color. Such specimens were never common."

Why?

Four-year-old Richard and his sister were both very fond of James Whitcomb Riley's poems for children and could say the "Raggedy Man" and "Little Orphan Annie," and "Way Out to Old Aunt Mary's," word for word.

One day Richard was looking through the book of poems again. He seemed quite thoughtful for a moment, then he said: "Daddy, if this Mr. Riley liked little boys and girls so well, why do people call him James Whipliphen Riley?"

The Reason

A clergyman was congratulating himself on a convert from a rival place of worship. "Why," he asked the good lady, "have you decided to forsake your chapel for my church? Is it that you find my sermons of greater comfort to you?" "No," was the reply. "It's not exactly that. The fact is they have cindered the pathway up to the chapel, and I find it that uncomfortable for the feet that I had to change."—Weekly Scotsman.

Virginia Anne, age three years, was just getting a good start in the primary department of a suburban Sunday school. The young teacher was telling the story of the shepherds and wishing to give especial attention to the babies of the class, asked:

"Virginia Anne, do you know anything about the shepherds?" "Sure," replied Virginia Anne, confidently, "I know all about 'em. They live right next door to us."

Nearly all kinds of these succulent foods are now available ready prepared in cans. But it was not until some fourteen hundred years after Nebuchadnezzar was turned out to graze "like the king" that the Frenchman Nicholas Appert, discovered the process which has enabled vegetarians to become city dwellers. At the present time there are thirty or forty different kinds of vegetables canned, several combinations and varieties of many of them, and more kinds are being added to the canned menu every year. Some of the princely vegetables which are universally and always available in canned form in this country are artichokes, asparagus, beans, beets, Brussels sprouts, cabbage, carrots, cauliflower, celery, corn, hominy, kale, lentils, mushrooms, okra, olives, onions, peas, peppers, pickles, pimientos, potatoes, pumpkin, sauerkraut, spinach, squash, tomatoes, turnips and wholewheat. A Healthy Diet Not only can the city dweller get all of the canned vegetables he wants, but he has the assurance of scientists that they are equal in nutritive qualities and superior in vitamin content to fresh vegetables cooked in open receptacles by the usual home methods. This is because canned vegetables are processed in hermetically sealed containers, and the oxygen which attacks their vitamin content is excluded.'
