Lovely Lake Louise, Gem of the Canadian Rockies

ONLY SNOW AT LAKE AGNES

GIANTS' SHEDS NEAR LAKE LOUISE

When spring is well under way, one of the questions uppermost in the minds of vacationists is how, when and where to spend the few well-earned weeks of rest after a year of toil. The seashore, the mountains, the woods, each possesses an individual appeal and it is sometimes difficult to decide upon one or the other.

One of the most delightful spots in North America is Lake Louise, gem of the Canadian Rockies, considered by many to be among the most perfect bits of scenery in the world. This mountain jewel, which lies in a setting of towering glaciers-crowned peaks, is attracting more and more discriminating people annually, for its beauty is breath-taking and worthy of traveling thousands of miles to see. In fact, many visitors to Lake Louise are content to sit on the veranda of the Chateau Lake Louise for hours at a time, watching the kaleidoscopic reflection of the glaciers and clouds in the limpid depths of the lake itself.

Lake Louise is in Alberta, Canada, 45 miles from Banff, one of the best known resorts in the West. It is on the Canadian Pacific railway. It is a line of the world's greatest scenic beauty, and from all points in the United States and Canada.

The scenery in the vicinity of Lake Louise is rugged and inspiring, and there are many places to go and many things to do. Pony riding over mountain trails, fishing in glacier-fed streams, expeditions by motorbus over the 45-mile scenic Banff-Windermere Highway, swimming in the Chateau's big pool, dancing and all the diversions of modern civilization speed the hours, and it is with genuine regret that the holiday-maker packs his things and departs, carrying with him a never-fading mental picture of this, the queen of mountain resorts.

Spencers the Wolf-Trimmed Coat.

wolf (the coyote of our western states), and badger, with its silvery tones, are as springlike as the gay tweed weaves which they adorn.

"Fox, always so popular as a separate neck-piece, is increasingly fashionable this spring. The soft flattering qualities of our American red, and silver fox, and the rare beauty of the cross fox, makes them ideal for spring wear."
