Birds and Animals Know Spring Due Soon in Woods and Fields

In the woods and fields, wild-life populations are well aware that spring is soon due to arrive, and are acting accordingly.

Bobcats and the cougars have both gone a'courtin'. Coyotes are voicing their call for den mates; mountain quail will soon be pairing off, their plaintive mating call sounding across the hills.

The booming voice of the blue grouse, sitting high upon his perch within the timbered stretches, will be heard as he sits there hooting faithfully during the nesting period of his mate.

The ruffed grouse's drumming like the roll of a drum or the throbbing of a giant heart, will occur far less frequently than does the booming voice of the old blue hooter, for that colorful bird is disappearing in numbers at an alarming rate throughout the whole of southwestern Oregon.

Unless steps are taken soon to afford it protection throughout the seasons, it is only a matter of time until it will be virtually extinct here in its natural habitat.

The old cock ring-neck will be consulting with Ma as to the site to be selected for the spring nest.

The band-tailed pigeons will come flocking in from their past winter quarters that lie far to the south of us, and start erecting their nests along the timbered sections to be found in many parts of this state.

The small heart-shaped tracks of fawns will mingle with those of their mother does. Small, spotted, and timid, as well as trusting little fellows that do not hesitate to trot along at the heels of a person who chances upon one of such animals and proceeds to pet it. But you can take all your birds and beasts together; when Mother Bear, reposing within her den, beats 'em all, for while all other animals and birds are mating, she has already given birth to her youngsters, somewhere around close to the advent of the new year. However, her cubs didn't make too big a splash when they weighed into this world at less than a pound apiece.

Crouse Was "Native Pheasant" The ruffed grouse at one time was generally known throughout Oregon as the native pheasant and is still recognized by that name by many of the older residents. Over quite a number of years it was listed as "native pheasant" in the game code and given general recognition by both game officials and hunters under that name. As a result of the name changing, confusion still exists in many quarters concerning the actual identity of the bird.

The Horned Owl The horned owl is regarded by many as one of the most destructive birds of prey now in existence. This bird is one of the early nesters, and deposits its eggs—two in number—in its nest during the month of February. This means that such birds are hatched long before other birds are, giving the big horned birds—the parents of the fast growing and hungry young'uns—an opportunity to prey upon the hatch of other nesting birds.

Both game and song birds are preyed upon by the big owl, and as a result, he is regarded by the great majority of hunters as a real menace to virtually all species of birds.

However, that old adage: "Good may be found in the worst of us," also includes the great horned owl. Not only does he feed upon songsters and game birds, but he also swoops down upon the nests of such birds as the Cooper hawk and the crow, seizes their young and carries them as food to his own offspring.

In Michigan, wildfliers studying birds of prey ranked the horned owl as a major limiter of crow productivity. In fact, they rated the big-eared scamp as a regulating force over the whole predatory bird community during the breeding season, due mainly to the early start it gets in nesting.

The horned owl derives its name from its unusually large and sharp pointed feathered ears, as they resemble horns to a marked degree.

Things You May Not Know The opossum is no larger than a honey bee at birth. The giraffe is as tall as an average adult human being when born.

Fish are not born with scales. A baby fish is born naked of scales, later sprouting them from under its skin.

"Madame Castel's Lodger" by Frances Parkinson Keyes. Madame Castel's lodger is P.G.T. Beauregard, full general, hero of Fort Sumter, victor at Manassas, first idol of the Confederacy—and an incomparable lover! Historians often refer to him as "Napoleon in Gray"; his devoted soldiers called him "Old Boy"; his Anglo-Saxon fellow officers "The Great Creole"; his family and friends, Pierre; and his countless female admirers by endearing terms too numerous to mention. His story, now told for the first time in the form of superb biographical fiction, is one of tremendous drama from start to finish.

There is a complete set of Young People's Science Encyclopedias. The nearly four thousand topics covered in this set are drawn from all of the basic sciences, biological and physical, as well as many special branches from which elementary and junior high school science concepts are drawn. These latter branches include: astronautics, nuclear science, medicine, aerodynamics, radiology, electronics, meteorology and many others. Concepts drawn from these special branches of science are used in areas of study for young people such as: space travel, atoms and molecules, diseases, aviation, radiation, communication and weather.

The Young People's Science Encyclopedia does not confine its coverage to information alone. More than 200 things to do are included and are placed in the individual volumes near the informative articles to which they are related. Just as science is not limited to the study of information, so this encyclopedia emphasizes not only "look it up" but also "learn by doing."

For the party planners and givers—"Group Socials for Every Month" shows you, step by step how to plan and execute entertainment for church, club, or other groups, with success assured.

Along this same line are two other helpful books—"The Cokesbury Party Book" and "Phunology", both full of planned parties and games and entertainment plans.

Everyone square dancing at the Cove Saturday night seemed to have a roaring good time.

Ernie Nelson and Connie Colson did several Irish tips in honor of St. Patrick's day. Bob Lewis and his wife Audrey, from Roseburg, square danced with us. Come again, Bob and Audrey.

We are grateful to Ed Zastera for the two new tables and two new benches. Also to Carl Platt for the two "Beachcomber" signs he made for the club. Just a reminder, Moss Back square dance at the Cove on March 24 from one to five p.m. Pot luck supper at 5 p.m. Ernie Nelson, Barney Barnes calling. Everyone welcome.

The South Coast area meeting will be held on March 23 at the Stump Jumpers' Hall, 549 S. Broadway, Coos Bay, at 7 p.m. Square dance after the meeting with the Stump Jumpers. Rogues and Ruffles will be dancing at Ophir Grange Hall on March 23.

Y NOT BE A SQUARE DANCER?

The Port Orford Lion's Club and the auxiliary held a dual induction of new members Wednesday, March 6, at The Orfords. Cocktail hour was from 7 to 8 with dinner served at 8. The following new members were inducted by zone chairman Andy Anderson from the Gold Beach club Ralph Miller, a member of the Oregon State Highway Department; Ronald Larsen, associated with The First National Bank of Oregon; Ray Pearson, owner of the Standard Station, Dale Bartlett, owner of the Bartlett's Cafe; Don Stole, of Stole and Sons Logging Co.; Ed Roush, auto salesman; Ken Werner, supt. of the F.S.P. Mill; Delbert Neal, owner of Neal's Variety Store; Jules Hick, supt. of the Western States Plywood Mill and Searcy Binford, owner of Humbug Lodge. The Lions of Port Orford are very fortunate to have these men as new members and very proud to except them into the club.

Besides Lion Andy, there were four Gold Beach members who came up to assist in the ceremony.

I received word this morning that Lion Fred Losdon was taken back to Portland to the Veteran's Hospital. I will print his address as soon as I obtain it. Please write to him. There will be a Lion's meeting on Wed., March 20, 7:30 p.m. at The Orfords. A guest speaker will give a talk. This will also be election of officers so every Lion be there to vote for your favorite candidate. See you next week.

See you next week.

Keeping Oregon's highways clean and attractive cost the State Highway Department $183,782 during 1962, according to Forrest Cooper, state highway engineer. Of this amount, approximately $91,500 was cleanup costs directly chargeable to servicing the 700 litter barrels located on highways throughout the state. Much of the remaining cost went to cleaning up scattered rubbish left behind by litterbugs. This work, plus the litter barrels, has resulted in the Highway Departments receiving many letters from out-of-state visitors complimenting the state for its clean highways. The Highway Department has installed signs at strategic locations throughout the state reading "Don't Litter Highway—$100 Penalty", but not everyone heeds the warning. "Litterbugging" along the highways of Oregon last year caused the arrest of 87 persons and fines totaling $1,107, and dumping rubbish caused the arrest of 93 persons and fines amounting to $1,507.50, according to the Oregon State Police. Among the cases cited was the arrest of a carefree motorist in Marion county. The patrolman observed him cruising along in a pickup, singing lustily, drinking beer and tossing the empties out the window. He was charged and convicted of litterbugging. In Klamath county, a passenger was arrested after throwing out three wine bottles; he was fined $100 and was given 20 days in jail when he couldn't pay. A truck driver was fined $10 after emptying six quarts of oil in his motor and dumping the cans along the highway. Near Pendleton, a female college student slyly slipped pieces of paper out the rear car window; she was fined $25 after conviction.
