

English Sixpense Worn By Karen McCool

MRS. DARRELL R. TURNIDGE
(Karen Sue McCool)

A double ring ceremony in the Harlow Chapel of First Baptist, Eugene, Dec. 19, united Karen Sue McCool, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles McCool, Port Orford, and Darrell R. Turnidge, son of Raymon C. Turnidge, Kearns, Utah, and Mrs. Theodore M. Blacker, Moscow, Idaho.

The rites were performed by the Rev. Dr. Vance Webster at 2 o'clock. A light blue and white spiral candelabra with white gladiolus, carnations and holly decorated the chapel. The candles were lit by Cindy Jacobs, 10-year-old niece of the bride, who was gowned in a short peacock blue velvet dress, gathered at a high waistline with a white square collar and cuffs and a corsage of white carnations and holly at the wrist.

Guy Aydelott was soloist. As she was escorted to the altar by her father, Karen was wearing a white velvet modified empire style gown, with pearls and frosted bugle beads marking the empire line and the border of the kakuki sleeves with a detachable wattleau train. A crown of pearls held her silk tulle veil and she carried a cascade of white carnations and holly.

In romantic tradition, the bride's "something old" was an 1891 English sixpense worn in her shoe.

She was attended by her sister, Mrs. Theodore Jacob of Tillamook, as matron of honor. She was attired in a modified empire gown with bodice of peacock blue velvet and a floor length skirt of white crepe and carried a bouquet of white carnations and holly.

Mark Blacker of Moscow, Ida., brother of the bridegroom, was best man. Sharing ushering duties were Douglas McCool,

Library Lowdown

The City Library has now added a set of juvenile biographies to its shelves. Each book is written by a different well-known author. Adult readers will find the books as enjoyable as the young.

Mark Twain is brought to life by Jeanette Eaton in "America's Own Mark Twain." Tracing Mark Twain from his own "Tom Sawyer" childhood through his riverboat pilot and world-wide traveller years to his great success as an author, Miss Eaton has skillfully portrayed one of America's best-loved authors.

In "Around the World with Nelly Bly," Emily Hahn has retold the exciting story of Nelly Bly, first woman newspaper reporter, and her thrilling race around the world as a publicity stunt. Travelling unchaperoned, she attempted to beat the time of Phileas Fogg, fictional hero of Jules Verne's "Around the World in Eighty Days."

Walter O'Meara's book "The First Northwest Passage" traces the route of Alexander McKenzie in his dangerous journey across Canada. When George Washington was President of the United States, Alexander McKenzie made his way up the Peace River and over the Rockies to discover the first canoe route to the Pacific Ocean.

A few of the other new biographies are: "Gold in California," Paul I. Wellman; "Sailing the Seven Seas," Mary Ellen Chase; "Riders of the Pony Express," Ralph Moody; "Jenny Lind Sings Here," Bernardine Kietly; "Lafayette in America," Andre Maurois; and "Washington Irving," Anya Seton.

Eugene, brother of the bride, and Dwayne Brittelli, Salem. The reception was held in the Rhoda McNutt room of the church with Mrs. Douglas McCool serving cake, Linda Savin pouring coffee and Carol Sanderson at the punch bowl.

Ryan Carpenter attended the gift table and Deatra Tosche the guest book.

The new Mr. and Mrs. Darrell Turnidge traveled to Mt. Hood for their honeymoon.

Karen was graduated in 1964 from Troy High School, Troy, Ohio, and is a sophomore at the University of Oregon.

Darrell is a graduate of the University of Idaho. A Phi Beta Kappa, he is currently attending the University of Oregon where he has received his M.A. Degree and is now studying for his doctorate in mathematics.
