Dual Games On Weekend

The Pacific Pirates will meet the Myrtle Point Bobcats in a regular league contest at Pacific Friday night. The JV game will start at 6:15 p.m. A make-up non-league game will be played with Douglas on Saturday night, Jan. 23, with the same starting time.

Steelhead Angling Torrid

Oregon steelhead anglers report some of the best steelhead fishing they've ever enjoyed in most of the coastal streams as well as several Columbia tributaries.

Some of the top producers to date, according to the reports, include the Necanicum, Nehalem, Kilchis, Wilson, Nestucca, Siletz, Salmon, Alsea, Siuslaw, and Sandy. On the south coast, anglers have been singing the praises of the Chetco, Rogue, Sixes, Elk, Pistol, and the Millicoma.

The success of the Game Commission's steelhead hatchery program is much in evidence by the impact it is having on angler success. If the high success continues through the remainder of the winter, marked steelhead from Game Commission releases will contribute well over 50 percent of the total catch, which is expected to run from 180 to 200 thousand ironheads.

So far this winter, marked steelhead have contributed 76 percent of the catch from the Kilchis, 68 percent from the Wilson, about 50 percent from the Siletz, 60 percent from the Alsea, 50 percent from the Salmon River, 61 percent from the Siuslaw, and 50 percent from the Sandy. Marked fish records have not been tallied as yet from other streams on the Commission's stocking schedule.

Red hot angling continues to be reported from all major steelhead fishing streams. A few slowdowns have occurred this winter during high, muddy water periods. However, catches have picked up immediately when streams have cleared and dropped.

Milk Quota Formula Is Announced

A comparison of the total of the four low production months of each producer with the four high months of Class 1 sales of the market, plus 15 per cent, will be used in the future in figuring quotas of milk producers under the Oregon Quota Plan.

This factor will be applied to a producer's daily average production to determine his new quota to be allocated yearly on February 1.

The new method for determining quotas is the result of amendments made by the Oregon Department of Agriculture in regulations relating to annual quota adjustment and reallocation. Revision of the regulations followed a December 16 hearing in Salem on the changes being proposed by the department.

For the year 1971 the quotas are being figured on the four lowest months of all producers as compared with the four highest months of sales of all Oregon licensed handlers during the calendar year 1970.

Prior to this, quota reallocation was based on the four low months compared with the four highest sales months and provided for loss of quota by a producer if he failed to produce his share of the market needs, which was 104 percent of his quota or more. A producer could also lose quota if there was a decline of Class 1 sales in the market area, but shared in any Class 1 sales increase or quota lost by those failing to produce their share of the market needs, if he produced more than his portion of the market needs.

PIRATE Bruce Slocum (41) heads for the basket during the hard-fought fourth quarter at Coquille Tuesday night, while Red Devils Curt Roberts (50) and Dean Parker close in on him.

Although the Pirates lost the game, 76-65, they pulled to within two points, 57-55, of the Devils midway through the fourth quarter.

ROUDDOOR RAMBLINGS

BY LANS LENEVE

Criticism of the sporting qualities of certain guns is old stuff. In a recent issue of England's "Shooting Times & Country Magazine," a reader wrote that his grandfather's reputation as a sportsman had suffered when he appeared as a guest in a shooting party with a hammerless shotgun. In England today, the double gun is the only socially acceptable gun for certain birdshooting, and an American repeater is frowned on in the best circles.

This was once true here in this country. In a 1905 outdoor magazine, a writer griped: "I am sorry that the Winchester Company intends to put an automatic gun on the market. Such a slaughtering machine should not be put in the hands of the bristlebacks." (game hogs)

BIRDS SCARE DOGS OUTLAWED

In the early 1900s, with the end of much of our game in sight, it seemed that the last thing we needed was an "automatic" shotgun. Petitions were drawn up against autoloaders, and bills to outlaw them appeared in legislatures. The blame for American bird declines went beyond repeating shotguns, and even fell on bird dogs. In North Dakota, the use of pointers and setters for hunting upland game birds was outlawed from 1913 to 1943.

Such concern jelled in a number of gun and ammo restrictions. There are two basic reasons for these: that certain guns and loads are too effective to be sporting, or aren't effective enough. An example of the first is the prohibition of waterfowl guns larger than 10 gauge, and holding more than three shells. An example of the second is the general prohibition of 22 rim-fires for shooting big game.

Of course, any gun can be sporting or unsporting, depending on how it's used and regardless of the gauge or caliber. Legislation controlling the design of hunting guns and ammo can go only so far until, an in-gun control legislation, it runs head-on into human ethics.

Even during the blasts of anti-autoloader criticism 70 years ago, this was obvious. As one hunter wrote in Recreation Magazine in 1900: "A sportsman is not made or unmade by the gun he carries. Don't call the gun the game hog, but the man behind it."

Earnest Thomas Seton quoted a superb Indian description of the bighorn sheep: "Bighorn can't hear thunder, can't smell dead horse, but can see through thin rock."

Then there was the wise Cree guide who heard a volley of distant rifle shots and turned to his dude and grinned: "One shot, one deer. Two shots, mebbe one deer. Three shots, heap nothing."

The Association of Conservation Engineers is a corps of professionals who work in state game, fish park agencies, literally building bridges between the public and good resource management. They have two basic jobs: to enhance environment with engineering, and to alleviate environmental damage. They must work with one eye on engineering feasibility and the other on sound biology—and that can make designing an SST seem like playtime with Tinker Toys.

Important people. For one thing, they are developing technical savvy about environmental engineering. At the same time, they are trying to convince other engineers—no doubt the U. S. Engineering Corps—that from now on, no engineering can be feasible if it doesn't include built-in environmental safeguards.

But more than anything else, the Association of Conservation Engineers proves that conservationist and engineer can work together—and may even be the same man.

ENGINEER CAST AS VILLIAN

For year the engineer has been cast as a villain in nature, and for good reason. He has dammed rivers, straightened channels, paved wilderness and done all sorts of mischief. He may protest that the real baddie is the politician or investor who controls him. Or, as Flip Wilson says: "The Devil made me do it."

SOUTH COAST Anglin's

by Rik Riikula

Winter steelhead angling is at a stand-still all along the south coastal area. All streams are high and muddy, with little hope of being fishable this week.

Larger streams such as the Rogue and Chetco Rivers will likely remain out of shape for a week or more. Smaller streams like Brush Creek, Hunter Creek and Pistol River did not flood badly and could be fishable within three or four days, possibly by the weekend.

Between poor stream conditions and being past the peak of winter steelhead migrations for the season, fishing is expected to be slow.
