SIXES GRANGE NEWS
By MRS. CLARENCE BROOKS

Sixes Grange met Saturday evening, Sept. 9 with master Bob Billings presiding. The Home Economic Chairman reported on plans for a dinner to be served for the Christian Women's Club on Sept. 20.

Legislative Chairman C. H. Brooks reported on a new law requiring farmers to carry a permit for moving of hay on the highway. This has been a law for transporting stock on the highway for many years but is new for hay. He also spoke of the rapid growth America had made as a young nation and how crime has caused it to deteriorate in recent years.

Insurance chairman, MacDonald, indicated if you bought a '73 car you would get a discount on insurance.

The yearly Church Thanksgiving Dinner was discussed and a date set for the Sunday before Thanksgiving. All churches of the Langlois and Port Orford area are invited to attend. Pastors will be contacted as to plans for the dinner in a short time.

It was decided to have a "cake walk" at the next meeting, September 23.

The needlework contest was judged and Kathy Phillips of Langlois won first on her knitted sweater. Linda Billings, first on embroidered pillowslips, and Katherine Rice first on edging on pillowslips.

Vera Redinbaugh, Jessie Ells, and W. L. Montgomery were reported ill.

Book Review

FROM THE CITY LIBRARY

Do you know Janice Holt Giles? If you enjoy historical fiction set in frontier America, you will find Mrs. Giles' books in the City Libraray exciting and realistic.

In "Hannah Fowler" Hannah leaves Pennsylvania with her father during the Revolutionary War. Hannah is a big woman whose strength meets its first test when she watches her father die of an infected axe wound. Going on, she finds fort life in Kentucky territory so crowded that she proposes to Tice Fowler to escape. Hannah needs her strength again to fight wolves during a hard winter. But her greatest test comes when she is captured by looting Indians. Alghough Hannah is pregnant, she must leave as their captive or die.

In The Believers, we see a more settled Kentucky life. Hannah's daughter Rebecca watches her young husband change from a serious, young man into a devout Shaker. She tries to find contentment in the Shaker community where husbands, wives, and children are separated, where all share according to their abilities and needs. In the end Rebecca must break from accepted ways.

In Johnny Osage, another of Hannah's children, Johnny, has lived with the Osage Indians in Oklahoma. His respect for Indian life often sets him against both the army and the missionaries. When Cherokees slaughter a camp of Osage women and children, Johnny must choose between his adopted Indian family and the missionary woman he loves.

One of Mrs. Giles' novels is set in modern Kentucky: The Enduring Hills. This story of hill people shows what ultimately happens to the descendants of those who settled Kentucky during the Revolution. It tells of one young man who breaks from the pattern of what is called hillbilly life.

These are only a few of Mrs. Giles' novels. All those that I've read have caught and kept my interest, as every good book must do. A final word--don't be put off by the drab covers on some of these books. What's inside is exciting.

Free Permit Still Needed

The free permit system that was started this year for visitors to Wilderness areas within the National Forests will continue year around, the U. S. Forest Service reports.

Hunters, ski touring parties and others who visit Wilderness in the fall and winter are reminded to obtain a permit before their trips. Permits may be obtained by mail or in person from any Forest Service office in Washington and Oregon. With the coming of fall, National Forest and Ranger District offices frequently will be open only five days a week, and some guard stations where permits have been issued in summer will be closed.

Wilderness users are to be complimented on their cooperation with the Wilderness permit system put into effect this year for National Forest Wilderness in Oregon and Washington, said Regional Forester Theaodore A. Schlapfer.

More than 70 percent of Wilderness visitors have voluntarily applied for the free permits. "This is remarkable," Schlapfer said, "considering that the permit system is new and that Wilderness visitors come from all over the Nation."

The permit system has given Forest officers a chance to talk with visitors about Wilderness management and to suggest places to go in Wilderness that are less congested.

Permits will be tabulated and analyzed this winter to provide information about where visitors come from, where they go, size of groups, number of visitors, numbers of hikers and horsemen, and other information needed to plan effective Wilderness administration.

There are 14 Wilderness areas in the National Forest of Oregon and Washington that are part of the National Wilderness Preservation System.

Curry County 4-H Placings At Oregon State Fair

Many Curry county 4-H Club members participated in the Oregon State Fair as a result of their efforts at the Curry County Fair, notes Walt Schroeder, Curry county extension agent.
