 OPEN SUN, AFTERNOONS

OUTDOOR RAMBLINGS

By Lans Lanove

Proposals to increase state hunting and fishing licenses fees often have tough sledding. Illinois is a grim example of this. With no license increase since 1957, Illinois ranks well below the national hunting license level, with a resident fee of only $3.25. Two years ago, a conservation department plea to hike license fees, and from the present rate to that of $2. was squelched by the Illinois legislature. It was not a partisan move; the fee increase was opposed "from both sides of the aisle." Opposition stemmed from legislators' reluctance to raise fees, and from sportsmen who didn't feel like they were getting their money's worth and were reluctant to "throw good money after bad."

DIM VIEWS TAKEN
 State legislatures are likely to take a dim view of any public money that's earmarked for special use and is no part of the general fund--such as hunting and fishing revenue. The salons are also likely to take even a dimmer view of increasing such funds.

And more than that, sportsmen themselves may block efforts to raise license fees. They poor-mouth often the idea, protesting that they can't pay more for licenses. That's ironic, considering the fact that discretionary spending for recreational vehicles, sporting goods and travel is at an all-time high. Too many sportsmen are willing to spend more for outdoor gadgets, but not for the resource base on which the gadgets depend.

Or maybe the sportsman is unwilling to pay more to be licensed for which he figures to be a free privilege. The myth of good, free hunting and fishing lives on--hamstringing game and fish management. Oftand, we can't think of much free hunting and fishing that is really good except in spots today that are entirely over-run by the general public. And when it is, it's going to cost in terms of time, money and effort, or all three. But "free," it ain't. And the more sportsmen insist on having free sport, the less chance they'll have of having hunting or fishing at all.

A CHEAP LICENSE PROVES COSTLY
 There's an old bromide that a hunting and fishing license is the sportsman's greatest bargain. It can be. But a cheap license can be costly, for it means that the public is drawing on game and fish capital without plowing anything back into the resource. Good game law enforcement, management and administration cost a lot of money, and the sportsman is going to get just about what he pays for.

"SCIENCE" FOR YOUR CHILDREN

"A touch of morning frost is in the air. Each breeze sends red-tinged leaves tumbling and gliding toward the ground. It's fall in the north woods."

"Bang! Birds scatter, chipmunks hide. Bang... bang... bang, bang, BANG!"

"It's also deer hunting time in the north woods!"

"During the opening hours of the hunting season, thousands of shots may be fired. A few hundred shots may actually be aimed at deer. Some of those shots may hit deer. And, game wardens say, out of every five deer that are hit, only one may be killed on the spot. What happens to the others?"

"Wounded deer flee through the woods. Most of these hurt and terrified deer will die later--out of sight of hunters."

Big Game Seasons

The article closes with questions: "Does hunting have a value to our environment? Or is it a type of savagery that should be ended?"

Big game hunting regulations for 1973 were set following a public hearing in Portland last week. Seasons are similar to last year and little changed from Game Commission staff recommendations published several weeks ago.

The general deer season will begin October 6 throughout the state, extending through October 18 in eastern Oregon and ending on Nov. 11 on the west side. Again this year, no antlerless permits will be issued for eastern Oregon deer herds which are still rebounding from a winter die-off and poor fawn survival in the past five years.

A High Cascade buck hunt will again be offered beginning on Sept. 15 and extending through Sept. 23. Hunters should take note that permits are required to participate in this hunt beginning this year.

Rocky Mountain elk hunters can begin their hunt on Oct. 27 in a season that will extend through Nov. 14. In the nine unit southeastern area, hunters may take elk of either sex from the beginning of the season through Nov. 4, and bulls during the remainder of the season.

Roosevelt elk season will open Nov. 17 and run through Nov. 28. Rifflemen will have an additional opportunity this year to draw for 100 antlerless permits to be issued for two areas in the Birkenfeld vicinity northwest of Portland. This area has been newly opened to limited rifle hunting because of heavy agricultural damage.

Bear season will be similar to last year, opening on Aug. 1 and extending through Dec. 31. Ten tags will be drawn for hunting bighorn sheep with eight to be issued for the Steens Mountain Unit and two for a new area, the Owyhee Unit. The season will open Sept. 15 and run through Sept. 21.

No open season will be held for mountain goat in Oregon during 1973.

Cougar will become legal game for 83 permit holders in northeast and southwest Oregon during the month of December. Permits will be restricted to more specific areas than in the past in order to spread the harvest over a larger area.

Bow hunters will have a wide selection of areas to hunt, and muzzle loader enthusiasts will have special hunts at Hart Mountain Refuge and Patterson Mountain, the same as last year.

The Game Commission has authorized a change in the minimum requirement for rifles that may be used for taking deer, antelope, cougar and bear. Twenty-two caliber centerfire rifles which develop at least 900 foot-pounds of energy at 100 yards will be legal this year. Rimfire .22's remain illegal as do some of the lower powered .22 centerfire calibers such as those in the 218 Bee and .22 Hornet class which do not meet the minimum energy requirements.

Hunters should check the synopsis of 1973 big game regulations for specific descriptions of areas and other pertinent regulations. The synopsis should be available in late June.
