Open house at the new Police Department offices draws visitors

The Port Orford Police Department held their first annual open house on Saturday, April 25 from 1-4 p.m.

We had a total of 14 people view the Police Department and meet the officers, both paid and volunteer reserves. This was well received by all who attended.

Thank you to those who took advantage of the chance to see the new Police Department and to meet the Officers.

On another note, please remember that the Medication drop off program is up and running at your Police Department.

directors positions has ignited a flurry of action, sign posting, and write-in candidates.

As of this writing, the Port Orford News has received the heaviest influx of letters to the editor in its recent history.

Not present at the forum were candidates Brice Wagner, who is on the ballot for position No. 2, and Joe Marsh, a write-in candidate for position No. 4.

To read what others have to say about the candidates, please see Candidate's Forum and Letters to the editor, page 3.

Statements for the SWOCC board were as follows:

Dick McMahon: "I chose to run because of the financial situation the college finds itself in," said McMahon. "I would bring a new voice to the board."

Marcia Jensen: "I have 25 years of accounting experience," said Jensen. "I would like to represent you and do what we already do - ensure a sustainable future for the college."

Brett Kenney: "I work for the Coquille Indian Tribe," said Kenney, a lawyer. "I advise on everything they do and I'm experienced in every form of law."

"I'm running to be a role model to my girls - it's important for me to demonstrate that to them."

John Robert Shilling: "I've been going to school for 25 years," joked Shilling, a teacher. "I have budget experience and right now we don't have anybody on the board with educational experience."

"Education has been my life and I offer those insights."

Julie Kremers: "I've lived in Oregon all my life," said Kremers. "I've spent the last six years working for SWOCC in the accounting department and this spring I graduated with a business degree."

"I want to cut somewhere where we don't have to cut staffing."
