EDITORIAL COMMENT

Farmers do not use their local papers enough, and yet the papers afford the quickest and best way to build up their farms and communities. They do not use the paper because, perhaps, many of them feel that they cannot use a flow of eloquence; others under-estimate the effectiveness and value of publicity; and still others are merely indifferent or to engrossed in their affairs.

Every farmer should tell his local paper about his successes on the farm and how they are achieved. We are always glad to get a "farming story," for it enables us to spread the news of progress in our vicinity. No one needs a flow of eloquence to tell of a success. The facts of a farming success are eloquent in themselves. So write us.

No farmer should be too indifferent or engrossed in his own work to pass a good thing along to his fellow men, thus giving him the benefit of his experiences. Such articles are always an inspiration to others. We well know that the true and lasting advancement of our community can come in no other way than thru the upbuilding farms, and so it is not social news we want any more than it is NEWS FROM THE FARM.

A corn is a little lump of agony placed on the foot to instruct us what size shoes we shall wear. In days past when a person with a number ten foot wore a number number ten shoe there were no corns. The average crop today is about three corns per foot. To intrude upon one's heart may be wrong, but to intrude upon a corn is a crime.

We are glad to see the comic valentine passing. Some of them are still used to be sure, but they mails are not flooded with them as they once were. It always seemed cowardly to us for a person to take advantage of such a silly practise when they wanted to roast somebody.

A man doesn't have to smoke or chew very much for his tobacco to cost him a dollar a week. What do you suppose he would say if his wife spent as much for candy and gum?

DAIRY and CREAMERY

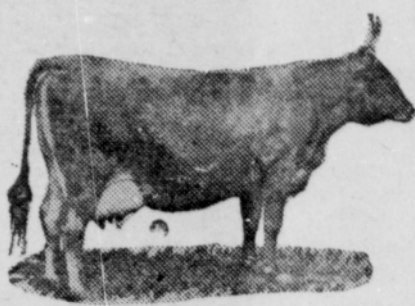

WINTER IN THE DAIRY.

Careful Feeding and Warm Shelter Needed to Keep Up Milk Flow.

The pinch of winter falls with peculiar force on the dairy. We do not always place due stress upon this, writes E. L. Vincent in the American Cultivator. Stop and think what a change it is from the fresh grass of the pastures or perhaps the still more juicy feed of the meadows to dry hay and grain. No wonder the cows shrink badly for a time in their yield of milk. Besides this, the difference in temperature has a tendency still further to narrow down the productivity of our herds unless we are watchful and take prompt steps to sustain the flow of milk.

One of the best features of the silo is that it provides succulent feed for this critical period. The corn stored in this way is juicy and goes far toward making up for the loss of sweetness from grass. Still further to overcome this first pinch of cold weather certain grains may be added to the ration. Of these gluten stands high in the estimation of the dairyman. Where this is fed in connection with some wheat feed or ground oats it makes a good substitute for pasture grass.

The showing of the Brown Swiss at the various shows and fairs last fall has been very conspicuous and noticeable. The breeders are giving a smoothness and finish to their cattle that are compelling the attention of the dairy world. This breed has also won the highest honors at the butter fat contests open to all breeds at the Michigan and Illinois State fairs of 1914. The illustration shows a Brown Swiss cow.

Then, too, we have found that stabling out of the cold storms and the no less uncomfortable winds has a good effect in maintaining the yield of milk. Nothing more surely reduces the vitality of a cow and thus lessens the ability to make milk than cold. A cow to do her best needs to be comfortable, and a chilled cow is never comfortable. It takes a lot of extra feed to sustain the milk producing machinery of a cow where she is compelled to battle with wind and storm.

Warmth lessens the demand for food and helps a cow to make more of the feed given her. In other words, good stabling lessens the cost of production of milk.

Still another simple thing helps to bridge over the sharp crisis of early winter, and that is careful grooming. Cleanliness keeps the body in good working order and enables the cow to use the feed given her to better advantage.

THE CREAM SEPARATOR.

Important Dairy Utensil That is Frequently Misused.

So many users of separators do not seem to know how to care for a machine of such delicate adjustment and consequently do not get the best results, writes L. W. Lighty in the National Stockman. It is roughly handled, abruptly started or stopped, carelessly washed and frequently out of balance. Often a poor grade of oil is used, and sometimes oiling is sadly neglected. Often the machine is pitched over with waste oil, dust, milk and fly specks. Thus handled the machine wears and depreciates rapidly and must soon be replaced. But the greater loss is sustained because a machine thus treated or mistreated does poor work and yields a contaminated product that never brings the best price on the market.

A standard cream separator is adjusted nearly as carefully as a watch and must be kept clean, carefully oiled, set level on a firm foundation, firmly fastened so it will run smoothly with the least possible vibration. A little carelessness will not only mean excessive wear on the machine, but entail loss in butter fat and quality of product.

Carrots For Dairy Cattle.

Carrots make a very good, succulent feed for cows. They are relished and can be fed in amounts up to forty or fifty pounds daily, depending upon the size of the cow. They do not contain as much total digestible nutrients, however, as do sugar beets, but are on a par with rutabagas and contain slightly more than mangels.

Save the Dairy Calf.

When just ordinary cows without pedigrees to back them up bring $70 and $80 at public sales selling the young heifer calf to the butcher for a few dollars is like killing the goose that laid the golden egg.

A Milking Hint.

When compelled to milk cows outside always keep on the windward side, and you will be surprised at the amount of dust that will be turned from the pail.

Slighted.

"I saw Blotson out this morning with his wife and her dog."

"Was he trailing behind his wife and her dog?"

"Why, no."

"I guess she was making a concession for the sake of appearances. That is his usual status at home."—Birmingham Age-Herald.
