REFORESTATION

During this Spring approximately 3200 acres of burned-over lands in the National forests of the Northwest will be reforested. About 2700 acres will be planted with young trees and the balance will be sown with seed.

This is more than twice the amount of similar work done in the Northwest during 1914. Last year the reforestation operations on the National forests of the Northwest consisted of planting only 930 acres and of seeding only 144 acres, a total of 1074 acres.
