A total number of 547 pupils passed the eighth grade examinations of Clackamas county schools this year, according to the figures of County School Superintendent Calavan who has completed all the routine work connected with correcting and filing the state examination papers.

The figure sets a new record for Clackamas county which is far above the figures of any previous year. Mr. Calavan attributes the increase to three causes: natural increase in the number of applications for state 8th grade diplomas; better teachers and easier examinations. He finds that the number of failures has been reduced materially.

Mr. Calavan believes that a large percentage of the graduates will attend high school. He bases his opinion on the interest shown throughout the county in high school education and in the new county high school tuition law which will permit students living in districts without high school to attend a high school without tuition.

AUTUMN WORK FOR GOOD ROADS

All Obstructions Should Be Removed.

TRIM THE GUTTER LINES.

Dead and Dangerous Trees Should Be Cut Away and Burned; Also Brush, Briars and Other Growth Should Be Destroyed.

To be quite plain about it, says a writer in the Farm Progress, the less actual digging and plowing, ditching and piling up of dirt done during the fall months the better for the roads. That is one of the things that have made American country roads about the worst in the world.

Road work ought to be well out of the way before midsummer. Of course it is not, but that would be the ideal way of getting the highways in the best of shape. Plowing, scraping, grading and filling ought to be done early enough in the summer to give all the newly moved earth time to settle down.

Where this is done about all that it is necessary to do in the fall is to run the drag over the road and fill up any holes that may have been scooped out in the wheel track. To attempt anything more is to make it very certain that the newly worked stretch of road will be a regular quagmire some time before the first of the year.

Of course there is always some repairing that may be done unless the culverts and bridges have all been rebuilt lately. During the summer the earth may have been worn away from a culvert or a bridge approach, and where this happened it should be refilled and the approach put into good shape by the use of a great deal of broken rock and gravel. To put in dirt will merely make a bad matter much worse, as soon as the road gets soft.

Other work that may be done with profit now is the clearing off all obstructions from the right of way. Dead and dangerous trees may be cut away and burned now as well as at any other time. Brush may be cleaned off the right of way and destroyed and briars and other growth taken out. It will do little good to cut and burn the weeds at this time in the year, since all of them have matured and are ready to scatter seed.

Trimming up the gutter lines and the opening of the side ditches is work that may be done in the fall and, in fact, should be done then. The gutters and culverts will handle more water in the winter than at any other time, and if they are clean and lined up as they ought to be there will not be so many washed out places in the highways next spring.

Two railroads announce new work to be started at once, that will mean an expenditure of several millions of dollars. The Oregon-Washington Railroad and Navigation company will build a 30-mile extension to its line recently completed from Riverside, westward to Crane Creek Gap. The Southern Pacific announces it will electrify its line between Whiteson and Corvallis, a distance of forty-three miles, as an extension of the existing electric unit between Portland and Whiteson.
