EDITORIAL COMMENT

BILL BOGAN SAYS:

In the game of hearts it's always your turn to play.

The grass wiew makes hay whether the sun shines or not.

A woman may be born the equal of man but it doesn't take her long to over-come it.

The world owes everyone a living—and is just as hard to collect from as others who everyone.

We all like the man who smiles—and that may be the reason why things come so easy for the smiling villain.

When you get on the right track be careful that someone else does not get the right-of-way and come up from behind and butt you into the ditch.

We are careless of things that come to us naturally. That may be the reason some women we know take such particular care of their complexions.

*There isn't a freak reform idea of any kind that wouldn't work all right if all people were honest—and for that reason most of them will never work.

One of the worst features of our free government is the bunch of tattered candidates' cards that disfigure poles and old buildings from one election to another.

You hear a good deal about fighting roosters, but did you ever take notice of the way a prowling dog or cat retreats before the onslaught of the mother hen?

The man intoxicated with the nectar from a woman's lips may feel just damb-hoolish over it the next morning as the man who was on a regular souse the night before.

A girl in Germany has just been married without the bridegroom. The groom was at the front and couldn't be present. Some day he may wish that the war had never ceased.

If there is anything in the old saying about faith that moves mountains, the woman that believes everything her husband tells her has faith enough to make this old world reverse its motions.

We should not be so quick to express our own conclusions when someone is found "not guilty." Think of the many things of which we are guilty which our own hypocrisy keeps from becoming known.

A man feels completely neglected both at the wedding and when the first baby arrives—but he may get some satisfaction from reflecting that those who go into raptures over the wonderful things done by delicate machinery give little consideration to the flywheel, without which the engine that operates the machinery could not run.

THE STOCKMAN.

Thousands of colts are harboring worms and so becoming thin and rough in coat and their owners do not know what is wrong. The worms themselves may be seen if looked for.

There seems to be a prejudice against sheep in many neighborhoods, and yet there is profit in them when they are given the right kind of attention.

Gentle sows can be so handled that they will take kindly to any management.

It pays to keep culling the sheep, always aiming at greater perfection.

When we consider the thousands and thousands of horses that are going out to the war zone every farmer should realize the opportunity in sight to raise some good horses at a profit.

Save the breeding pigs from the sows that have large litters.

THE FABLE OF THE "BIG NOISE" THE AGENT AND THE PEDESTRAIN.

Once upon a time, an aged pedestrian wended his weary way down the path between the twin rails that served as a track for a certain transportation company, and paused in front of the little tank town depot. So weary was he that he failed to observe the luxuriously furnished office car coupled to a speedy locomotive on the siding opposite the door. And so, failing to note that the station agent was being honored by a call from a "Man Higher Up," he hobbled on inside, intent on inquiring the time of day from the company's local representative.

In the little office he found two men engaged in conversation. One was a pompous looking gook, with an "I'm the guy" expression all over his unattractive face. The other was a meek appearing little fellow with a cheerful smile and modest manners. The old man politely asked his question. The larger man frowned and muttered something about being too busy to bother with tramps, and the old man turned away. But the smaller man called back and courteously gave him the requested information.

The old pedestrian afterward learned that the man who had dished up the insulting answer was the station agent at the little tank town, while the little fellow who served him with a civil reply was the official who rode in the private car outside the station door.

Moral—The cheapest machinery is always the noisiest.
