"For Sandy Always."

The parcel post can't carry the treasury deficit.

Long life consists largely in finding the pleasant features of your own condition.

It takes a real disaster to enable you to sort the heroes and brave ones from the cravens.

We all believe in reforms—the only trouble is to get someone else upon whom to start.

If you are not particularly anxious about when a thing gets done turn it over to someone else.

School boy's definition of 'germicide': "The condition the English are putting the Germans in."

Wonder if a bride gauges the love of the beaus who got left by the quality of their wedding presents?

A business failure has little significance to a woman in comparison with a mistake in buying a new hat.

Be sure you're right—then act just as courteously as if there were a possibility of your being mistaken.

Hating a person doesn't do the object of the hate half as much harm as it does the person doing the hating.

The way we wail and grieve over our little troubles, it's a wonder that some others haven't died with their troubles.

One thing about good base ball weather—that makes it worth while praying for is that it is also just what the crops need.

If every man were accepted at the value which he honestly places upon himself, some of us modest ones would be crowded out entirely.

Somehow or other we can't develop much sympathy for the fellow who is selling at a loss something for which he once refused a fabulous price.

We often think that it is better to be moderately hardup all the time than to enjoy wealth for a short time and then have to get back to the old grind.

A good man never knows how unappreciative the people are until some lying windjammer skins him out of the office he has filled faithfully and well.

About as amusing a thing as you will find in a day's travel is that of the young man tenderly nursing a mustache that looks like an eyebrow slipped out of place.

We wrangle with some people from force of habit and our wrangling may mean nothing, but we must not forget that there are others who are likely to hear us and may not understand the situation.

A man who made a proposition to kiss all the good looking women that appeared upon the streets of a city in this state was arrested on the charge of kissing every woman that he saw. He couldn't find any that weren't good looking in any town in this state.

THE FABLE OF THE CONVICT AND THE REFORM MOVEMENT

Once upon a time the doors of a penitentiary swung open to allow a man to make his departure. The warden slapped him on the back, shook his hand, and after giving him a little kindly advice started him on his way toward the railroad station. The convict's brain was filled with good resolutions and in his mind was firmly fixed a determination to "live it down." Some time during his five years "time" he had heard of a movement under the name of "The Convicts' Reform League," organized in a neighboring city, and it was here that his ticket read. Immediately on his arrival he sought out the minister whose name appeared on the stationery of the League. The reverend gentleman was busily engaged in writing a lecture on the subject of "Helping Make Men of Them" but took time to listen to the convict's story. He offered his sympathy but said frankly that he knew of no positions that might be open to an ex-convict. Disheartened a little our friend left the office and made the rounds of the remaining officers of the "League." They were all very sorry for him and gave him advice but none of them offered him work.

Finally, worn out and discouraged, he met an old man on the street who spoke kindly to him. The convict told his story and the man took him home, fed him, gave him a bed and next day found him a position as night watchman in a relative's factory. Later the convict learned that his benefactor had never heard of the Convict's Reform League."

MORAL—Most reformers want some one else to do the real reforming.

FEED HENS REGULARLY.

Neglect In This Matter Sure to Produce Bad Results.

It is poor policy to let the birds go to roost without their evening meal. Now and then a poultryman will be away from home at feeding time, and when he returns he finds the chickens have gone to roost. It is a long time from sunset to sunrise, too long sometimes for chickens to go without food, but when it comes to going without solid food from one morning till next morning it becomes disastrous to a flock of fowls, says the Kansas Farmer. There is no excuse for leaving the chickens so long without food. If you are planning to be away part of the afternoon feed them before you go, even if it is a couple of hours before the regular time. This will not do as a constant thing, but it is better than letting the birds go to roost with empty crops.

If you must be away at feeding time secure some one to feed the birds at the proper time. You may think that this neglect does not hurt the birds, but it does, for the poorly fed hen is usually the one that does not lay during the winter, and the same may be said of the neglected hen. If you expect good returns from your hens you must give them the treatment that warrants such returns. Of course this does not refer to the hens on a farm that can pick up bits of grain from around the corncribs and hog lots, but refers to those poultrymen who have to furnish everything to their poultry.

Grain For Hens.

Feed a variety of grain rations to poultry when confined to the house. Give oats, wheat, corn, barley, Kaffir corn, peas, millet, buckwheat and any others available. It is unwise to confine the hens to any one feed, as even if large quantities are eaten the system can use only a certain quantity of any one ingredient and requires others to balance the ration. Corn and buckwheat are heating and should be fed more freely in winter than in summer.

Save the Dairy Calf.

When just ordinary cows without pedigrees to back them up bring $70 and $80 at public sales selling the young heifer calf to the butcher for a few dollars is like killing the goose that laid the golden egg.

A Milking Hint.

When compelled to milk cows outside always keep on the windward side, and you will be surprised at the amount of dust that will be turned from the pail.
