"For Sandy Always."

BILL BOGAN SAYS:

Why are there so many mother-in-law jokes—a mother-in-law is no joke.

Some folks just can't get over a spite fence erected by a neighbor.

A knocker usually makes enough noise to be heard above most any uproar.

It's pretty soft for the young couple who have their nest feathered for them.

Some folks think luck is against them just because they have to work for what they get.

What's the use of man being good when woman will be called his better half anyway.

If it were not for the suckers in this old world a lot of people would starve to death.

L. E. HOFFMAN

The girl who graduates with highest honors most frequently marries the most ignorant boob in town.

A great number of folks holler about their hard luck when the same amount of energy would bring them good luck.

You can flatter a man or woman in five minutes into doing something that you couldn't drive them into doing in five hours.

The man whose dying request was that all the money he left be spent on his funeral, tried to beat the oft-made remark that you can't take your money with you when you leave this old world.

THE FABLE OF THE YOUNG MAN WHO WAS ALWAYS "GOING TO"

Once upon a time, in a town that boasted the residence of three souls who had seen Gertude Hoffman dance, there lived a young man who spent most of his time boasting of what he was going to do.

He had spent a year in Portland and thought that he knew the ways of the world and the big opportunities lying around.

But this young man would never explain why he had never grasped any of the opportunities "Just wait," and "You just watch me," were his favorite expressions and as sure as days came round he would tell his friends of having just turned down a flattering offer from some captain of industry who had begged him to accept the position at twice the salary of his president. He declared prominent merchants, wealthy manufacturers and eminent statesmen were bitter enemies of one another because they knew that the other was after the young genius's services. The man who owned the grain elevator in the little town insulted our hero by offering him a job weighing at what other boys would have considered big wages. There was but one person in the town who understood the mysterious youth and that one was his father. The father more than once had found his son unable to add a dozen figures correctly or to write a dozen words that any human being might read.

MORAL—To the people that know, there's always a reason.

FEED HENS REGULARLY.

Neglect in This Matter Sure to Produce
Bad Results.

It is poor policy to let the birds go to roost without their evening meal. Now and then a poultryman will be away from home at feeding time, and when he returns he finds the chickens have gone to roost. It is a long time from sunset to sunrise, too long sometimes for chickens to go without food, but when it comes to going without solid food from one morning till next morning it becomes disastrous to a flock of fowls, says the Kansas Farmer. There is no excuse for leaving the chickens so long without food. If you are planning to be away part of the afternoon feed them before you go, even if it is a couple of hours before the regular time. This will not do as a constant thing, but it is better than letting the birds go to roost with empty crops.

If you must be away at feeding time secure some one to feed the birds at the proper time. You may think that this neglect does not hurt the birds, but it does, for the poorly fed hen is usually the one that does not lay during the winter, and the same may be said of the neglected hen. If you expect good returns from your hens you must give them the treatment that warrants such returns. Of course this does not refer to the hens on a farm that can pick up bits of grain from around the corncribs and hog lots, but refers to those poultrymen who have to furnish everything to their poultry.

Grain For Hens.

Feed a variety of grain rations to poultry when confined to the house. Give oats, wheat, corn, barley, Kaffir corn, peas, millet, buckwheat and any others available. It is unwise to confine the hens to any one feed, as even if large quantities are eaten the system can use only a certain quantity of any one ingredient and requires others to balance the ration. Corn and buckwheat are heating and should be fed more freely in winter than in summer.
