Locking The Door

When a farmer owns a valuable horse he protects himself from loss at the hands of thieves by putting a padlock on his barn door.

The banker who cares for your money locks it up in his great burglar proof safe at night.

When the merchant goes home after the day's labor he leaves his goods under lock and key and bolts and bars.

The individual invariably takes measures to protect his own.

But not so with us as a nation. We have accumulated vast stores of wealth, but have neglected to provide the necessary means for the protection of that wealth.

It is true that after months of indifference congress has at last passed a preparedness measure by providing for the increase of the regular army and the National Guard to a total approximate force of about 700,000 men. But it will be several years before this force can be gathered together and armed and equipped and drilled and disciplined and put in shape to meet an enemy on equal terms. In the meantime we are just about where we were before the bill was passed—without a lock to our door.

It is not likely now that we will have any trouble with European countries after the present war is over. We sincerely hope not.

But we are not so sanguine as to the attitude of Japan. Our present state of national helplessness has forced congress and the administration to bow to the demands of Japan and eliminate from an immigration bill certain sections which were designed to protect American laboring men from the cheap Japanese labor that has been flooding this country. There was no help for it. It was a case of bow or flight, and we are in no condition to fight.

If Japan would be content with her victory all might even yet be fairly well. But it is doubtful if she will be content. The Japanese are a warlike people, determinedly bent upon securing equal rights on the American continent.

And right here enters the present element of danger to our peace and security of the future.

The Mexicans hate everything American. They are imbued with the mistaken idea that we are a people who will not fight and hence they consider us beneath their contempt.

It is reasonably well known that Mexican emissaries are in Japan seeking the aid of the Japanese people in a war against the United States. Nothing would suit the Japanese designs and purposes better than such an alliance. It would afford them the coveted opportunity and excuse for seizing the Philippines, which they greatly desire. A great army could be landed on our Pacific coast and we could not prevent it. Another tremendous army of Japanese could be landed in Mexico, and in cooperation with the Mexicans could invade us across the border at a hundred different points simultaneously. Our present military strength is so ridiculously small that we would be hopelessly outnumbered and outmatched at every point.

Press dispatches show every indication that the Mexicans are expecting just such an alliance with the Japanese, and if the attack comes at all it will not be delayed until we have had two or three years in which to collect and drill an army. It will come soon, while we are still in a hopeless and helpless condition.

The American people are at last awakening to a realization of the peril of our national helplessness, and congress is taking belated steps toward defense for our homes and our great wealth. But are we locking the door too late? Will the marauder gain entrance before the padlock can be made? A stick of dynamite is a child's toy compared with the Mexico-Japanese situation which confronts the American government and people today.

A single word from Tokyo or Mexico City is of more vital concern to us than a whole column from the European front.

The essence of wisdom is to keep one eye on the Mexican and the other on the Jap.

Boys will be boys, but some are too devilishly boyish to run at large.

But, then, the fellow who disagrees with you is always a Mutt.

It has remained for the modern dentist to solve the unsolvable problem. When a woman gets into his chair her mouth is harnessed up to such an extent that it is utterly impossible for her to articulate a single word.

Politeness, like paint, is often spread on for effect.

Who says the world is on the move? You can see a murder almost any night by going to the movies.

You will never be able to sprinkle syrup on the tail of a fly so long as you wait for the other fellow to catch it for you.

Straw hats and perspiration will soon be ambling along.

It is comparatively easy to get anything within reason that you want. The only difficulty is in making up your mind to go after it.

Peace talk keeps right on bobbing up over in Europe, and as religiously bobs right down again.

You can generally gauge the quality of a man's kindness by the affection of his dog.

Before marriage some men take their best girl out and scatter money to the winds. But five years later wifey often yearns longingly for the price of a stick of gum.

Cellini's Quick Cure.

Benvenuto Cellini when about to cast his famous statue of Perseus, now in the Loggia del Lanzi at Florence, was taken with a sudden fever. In the midst of his suffering one of his workmen rushed into his sick chamber and exclaimed, "Oh, Benvenuto, your statue is spoiled, and there is no hope whatever of saving it!" Cellini said that when he heard this he gave a howl and leaped from his bed. Dressing hastily, he rushed to his furnace and found his metal "caked." He ordered dry oak wood and fired the furnace fiercely, working in a rain that was falling, stirred the channels and saved his metal. He continues the story thus: "After all was over I turned to a plate of salad on a bench there and ate with a hearty appetite and drank together with the whole crew. Afterward I retired to my bed, healthy and happy, for it was two hours before morning, and slept as sweetly as if I had never felt a touch of illness."

Disappearing Cannon.

"Some of our cannon are disappearing," remarked the lieutenant.
"Well, things will disappear when you have careless help," responded the lady who was going over the fort. "I find that a great trouble about keeping house."—Louisville Courier-Journal.
