AN AGRICULTURAL EMPIRE.

Remarkable Results of Dry Farming in Montana.

Not many years ago the press of the Rocky mountain states, especially those having large areas of what is classified as semi-arid land, printed enthusiastic predictions concerning the future of dry farming methods, says the New York Sun. Much that was claimed for the method seemed based on hope rather than achievement even in experiments. Recent results in dry farming if they have been published have escaped general attention. Therefore there will be surprise not less than gratification at the news that agriculture is now the chief industry of Montana, although that state is second in the Union in copper production, first in wool production, not far from first in cattle production and in Miles City has the largest horse market in the Union.

This was the assertion recently made by Senator Myers of Montana, and he fortified his claim with statistics of crop returns. Without details the almost startling story is told by the totals of the farm value of the crops of wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye, potatoes, hay and flax in 1900 and 1914, the total for the former year being $7,905,693 and for the latter $47,893,000.

Montana's production per acre of every crop just mentioned is greater than the average for the United States and greater with the single exception of flax in a single state than any of the twelve most productive agricultural states. It is interesting to follow further these figures of comparison compiled from the department of agriculture statistics.

Montana's nearest competitor in acreage average for wheat is Iowa, with 17.7 bushels, to Montana's 25.4 bushels. Other comparisons in bushels with the new agricultural state's nearest competitors are: Oats, Montana 43.2, Ohio 33.7; barley, Montana 34.8, Illinois 28.2; potatoes, Montana 148, Wisconsin 99; rye, Montana 22.8; Minnesota 19.2.

The strides Montana is making are shown by this comparison: In the ten

GROTESQUE FASHIONS.

Hats and Hair Frills in the Time of Marie Antoinette.

Some of the fashions in France during the reign of unfortunate Queen Marie Antoinette were exceedingly absurd, particularly hairdressing and hats, which were trimmed with such an extravagant wealth of feathers that the coaches had to have their seats lowered. According to Mme. Campan, "mothers and husbands murmured, and the general rumor was that the queen would ruin the French ladies."

One day Louis XVI. decided to forbid the court in a body to follow the royal hunt in coaches. In order to be freer he wished only to permit real sportsmen to attend. The noble ladies immediately rebelled, and the Princess of Monaco criticised the decision by means of her headdress, upon which arose a miniature royal coach, followed by two gentlemen on foot in gaiters. On the left of this was displayed a cypress garnished with black tears, the large robes being formed of crape.

More absurd still was the hairdressing of the mother of Louis Philippe, upon whose head every one could admire her son, the Due de Beaufort, in the arms of his nurse, as well as a parrot pecking at a cherry.

A Poor Retriever.

Wigg—I hear you've sold your bird dog. He was a good retriever, wasn't he? Wagg—I thought so, but he didn't bring much when I sold him.—Philadelphia Record.

Never use lime on land where strawberries are to be planted. For fertilizer use acid phosphate in small quantities.
