LIVE AND LEARN

It's been a long time since most of us were getting a little hilarious about the depression and swapping stories with the next door neighbor about who suffered the most. But that's about the way a lot of us acted when the '29 prosperity bubble broke and took all our pretty paper profits away.

We've learned plenty since then. We've learned that if we ever get another chance, we'll save. Boy, how we'll save! No more stocks on margin. No more automobiles for everyone in the family. If the kids can't use poppa's car they can do without. We'll buy no more houses in the hope of paying for them when our truck-load of money pulls up to the door next week. We'll go easy on fur coats, and diamond rings, and all the little trinkets we brought home as a little "before supper" surprise for ma.

We're all going to save for that rainy day that's going to come. For if we haven't learned anything else, we've learned that the rainy day stretches into a long, monotonous drizzle, with mighty few clouds breaking through.

The clouds are scattering now. Every time a new defense order barges out of Washington, another cloud breaks and lets a little more sun through. There's a boom on its way, and it's going to hit here any day now. Already, some of the industrial towns have the look of a good, healthy gold rush on the loose—and the boom is spreading.

Well, when it gets here, we'll welcome the little stranger—welcome him with a few minor reservations. We've seen his kind before. He's nice company, very entertaining, the life of the party. But when he goes, he leaves the world's worst hangover.

We're ready for this boom fellow. We've been toughened by too many long, bitter years not to know what to do when he gets here. They call us "Scrooge" or "Midas," "Miser" or "Stingy," but when this fellow leaves, we're going to be sitting pretty. We'll save every extra cent that comes along, because we know that a dollar in the sock is worth ten on paper. And how we know it!

But while we're waiting, we've been looking around. And there are a few little things we want to buy. And "Consolidated Mazuma" looks like it's due for a rise—we might take a flier on that. And ma's been talking about a couple of new dresses. And maybe the kids do need a car of their own—why everybody used to have a horse. But after that, we'll put our foot down. We're going to save, save, save!

There's just a few little things we want to buy first—just a few!

EVER-PRESENT SHADOW

There are a few people in this country who don't have to worry about fire. If, for instance, you live in an adobe house in the middle of a barren desert, fire holds few hazards for you.

But for 999 people out of each 1,000, fire is a very real problem—fire doesn't inform you in advance where or when it will strike. The shadow of fire lurks over every home and every factory, 24 hours a day, 365 days a year.

Fortunately for our well-being and peace of mind, that shadow can be dissipated to a very great extent. In home or business, a small list of simple precautions will clip most of fire's claws. Heating plants, for instance, are among the most prolific causes of fire.

Your town has an expert mechanic who can examine yours and make certain it is safe and efficient. Exposed electric wiring is still another major hazard—and again an expert mechanic, through periodic check-ups, can make it safe. Improper storage of paints, cleaning fluids and other flammables, is a third great hazard—a hazard which will disappear if you see to it that the liquids are kept in covered, airtight metal containers. Accumulations of papers, magazines, old clothes and similar junk, is a 4th hazard—all you have to do is call the rags-bottles-and-sacks vendor.

If you live in the desert far from other habitation, in a mud house, and depend on the sun for heat, don't worry about fire. But if you live elsewhere, start to work banishing the hazards now.

Marmot

(By M. M. Aschoff)

With the temperature holding around 40 degrees, the violets, Myrtle and wild Johnnie-Jump-Ups in bloom, we read in the papers of snow storms, blocked highways and blizzards in other parts of the country.

In planning our spring vegetable gardens a number of ladies in Marmot are including something to contribute to the hot lunches at the Sandy grade school, the following school year.

Mr. H. J. Stevenson has taken up his long line of traps, after a second year of unsatisfactory trapping. The unusual warm winter weather keeps the fur bearers in the higher altitude.

Mr. Sullivan Gulky from Enterprise, Oregon, has purchased the Hillcrest ranch in Marmot, from Mr. Bruce Dennis, of Portland. Mr. Gulky will take possession immediately. This is the 5th time the ranch has changed hands since the death of Mr. C. Minsinger in 1934, who pioneered the place.

Mr. Warren Crutcher from the Wemme district, was in Marmot Saturday, February 1. Mr. Crutcher has been interested in hunting cougar for the past three years, during which time he has killed ten of these big cats. Other hunters may have killed more cougars in the same period of time, but few have put forth more effort to eradicate these vicious beasts from the country. Mr. Crutcher has hiked through mountainous regions, on an average of more than 200 miles for each cougar he killed.

Mr. Billie Winters, who formerly operated a saw mill at Mountaineer, has recently purchased the Marmot Lumber Co. mill from Percy T. Shelley, and moved it to his own property in Marmot. Mr. Winters is reconstructing the mill to a capacity of 20,000 board feet per day, and expects to have it finished and operating in a short time. People of Marmot appreciate Mr. Winters as a saw mill man, because he has always paid his mtn.

Mr. Henry Ten Eyck was rushed to the Vettran's hospital in Portland Saturday, February 1, with a badly infected finger. He is reported as resting.
