A DARN HARD JOB

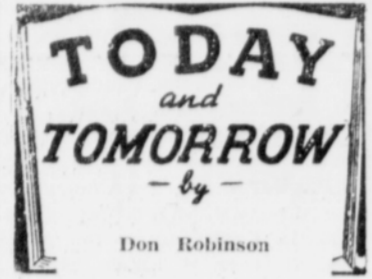

Banking is often thought of as a dull, unchanging business; the banker as a smug individual blessed with a degree of economic stability unknown to most of us. And yet, about the only thing that hasn't changed in banking during the last quarter century is the traditional marble and bronze atmosphere.

No longer is the local banker a provincial "homebody." He has, of necessity, become an internationalist. Modern transportation and communication bring the effects of ever-changing economic conditions over the entire world, to the smallest community almost immediately, sometimes with devastating results. The banker must anticipate these changes. He must advise borrowers against contingencies that twenty-five years ago were undreamed of. He must protect depositors against eventualities that may occur thousands of miles from his and their community.

Local business men today more than ever turn to the local banker for advice. Happenings completely outside their fields of endeavor often spell success or failure. A tariff adjustment, drought, transport facilities, war, a new scientific development, a slight change in production technique, are a few of the countless possibilities that may hit worker and employer alike, though they occur a continent or a hemisphere away.

The local banker, no matter how small his institution, must keep completely abreast of the times. In many cases, upon his judgment rests the fate of a taxpaying, employing enterprise. The task of the modern banker is enough to turn the hair gray. And all too often it is a thankless, misunderstood task. But at least it should be recognized for what it is—a darn hard job.

CIRCUS — — — — — kids This is the season when 50,000,000 kids, varying in age from 4 to 80, feed peanuts to monkeys, thrill to the roar of lions, cheer the man on the flying trapeze and laugh at the clowns.

From coast to coast hardly a county has missed some "greatest show on earth" ranging from a small tent full of mangy animals to the big combined Barnum & Bailey circuses which pack Madison Square Garden in New York and prove annually that even New Yorkers can't pose as sophisticates in the face of dancing elephants, fire-eating men, yowling apes and ball-playing sea lions.

I went to New York to see "the greatest show on earth" last week and there's no doubt in my mind that it is the pinnacle of showmanship—it includes the greatest aerial acrobats, the greatest animal acts, the greatest juggling, the greatest side-shows I ever expect to see. There was only one department in which it didn't reach perfection. There weren't any great or near-great clowns. In fact, I hardly remember seeing any clowns at all. And to me plenty of clowns are as important as plenty of peanuts at any circus.

STREAMLINING — — clowns

This year's big circus was streamlined by America's Public Stream-liner No. 1, Norman Bel-Geddes, who has streamlined everything from fountain pens to the famous Futurama at the New York World's fair.

Mr. Geddes is responsible for the sleek, bullet-shaped automobiles that are sold these days. He's responsible for some of those stream-lined trains that streak through country towns like ghost trains. He's responsible for countless designs which make most everything a year old appear behind the times.

And I've a sneaking suspicion that Mr. Geddes may have convinced the circusmen that clowns are old-fashioned.

Perhaps there is some way that clowns can be streamlined. Perhaps there is something that could make 50,000,000 kids laugh more than clowns have. But until it's invented any tampering with the clown acts should be prohibited, even if we have to take it to the Supreme court.

ACTS — — — — — unbelievable The most outstanding thing about the circus is that it gathers together under one roof a group of men and women each of whom can perform some act of muscular co-ordination that no one else in the world can accomplish. It presents the height of so many things.

I've seen tight-rope walkers before, but never before had I seen a man jump eight feet, land on a tight-rope and keep his balance on it—and never had I believed it was possible for a man to walk up a 200-foot rope at a 45-degree angle, turn around, and slide down the rope standing on his feet.

I've seen trapeze experts jump from one trapeze to another, but never before had I seen one turn a triple somersault in the air and escape a broken neck twice a day by always ending the third somersault by grabbing the finger-

WORK MADE INTERESTING

A boy ten years old was given the job of lading grease at a soap factory. There was a terrible stench in the factory; the work was most disagreeable. The boy had to wear a leather apron to keep from upsetting the grease on himself; in spite of his best efforts, he did spill it on the floor and on his shoes. He hated his job. The name of that boy was Benjamin Franklin.

His uncle told him something to change his entire life. He said: "Make your job interesting! All jobs are interesting if you make them so. The thing that's wrong is not the job. It's you!"

Young Ben thought it a crazy statement. But it did make an impression. He had a natural liking for reading and books, but now he threw himself into reading in earnest. Yes, more than mere reading. Study! He had to dip grease during the day; at tips of a man on another trapeze.

I've seen people do miraculous things on a swinging bar, but never before did I know it was physically possible for a girl to stand on her head on a bar, keep it swinging and not touch it with her hands or her feet.

I've seen trick riders but I still can't see how it is possible to ride on a single small wheel sitting 10 feet off the ground and make the bicycle dance.

The marvelous thing about the circus is that it presents a long series of things which anybody knows can't be done—and shows people doing them!

LIONS — — — — — Hitler Watching the lion-trainers who are able to frighten the fiercest of all animals into sitting on silly stools and behaving like puppy dogs, made me start thinking about Hitler.

I began wondering what would happen if some Winston Churchill of liondom persuaded all of the lions to work together instead of following their every-lion-for-him self policy.

For in the cage were 15 lions and tigers all roaring and snarling at one small man with a whip. Each one appeared to hate the trainer, but each feared him. They apparently didn't realize that they were all in the same boat—that they were 15 lions strong opposed to one man—and instead of working together they bit and snarled at each other instead of concentrating on their oppressor.

If those lions ever learned that in union there is strength, the lion tamer would never be able to handle them with a whip or a gun.

But what chance have lions to really learn that fact when, men who have always known it, seem unable to stop growling at each other long enough to concentrate on devouring the little man who is trying to make the whole world, including his own people, cower at the snap of his whip?
