ASH TRAY ESSAY

Mr. Motorist, this query is addressed to you, for you and you alone are the only person who can do anything to remedy a situation we have in mind. This situation was brought suddenly to our attention by one sentence in a public statement made recently by N. S. Rogers, state forester of Oregon.

"If motorists would stop flipping cigarettes and other lighted objects from their cars," said Mr. Rogers, "the cost of forest fire suppressions in this state would be cut approximately one-third."

This is a simple, forthright statement by a man who ought to know what he is talking about. Suppressing forest fires is a part of his job. Naturally he would prefer that forest fires didn't start. But we are coming into the worst half of another fire season. Our forest roads have never carried more motorists, both imported and domestic. We like tourists even though they have a bad habit of tossing any old thing out of their car windows. Plain rubbish is bad enough. Lighted objects are a crime.

Grass, made unusually heavy this year by early summer showers, is now a thick dry fire hazard along most Oregon roads.

Now, to come to the point, Mr. Motorist—is there any deep-seated, possibly subconscious objection to an ash tray in a motor car? Are the ash trays that the modern automobile carries difficult to use?

If your answer to both of these questions is "No," then we will have to look elsewhere for a rational explanation of the hundreds of forest fires caused in Oregon last year by motorists who did not use their ash trays.

TIME FOR READING

Trying to keep in touch with what's going on in the world today is a full time job. By quickly scanning a newspaper every day or listening to radio flashes, and reviewing the week's news in a news magazine, you can have a fairly good knowledge of what's what in national and international news. But to do that, even hastily, takes approximately 14 of the 168 hours in a week.

In addition, we want to keep in touch with what is going on in our home town. To do that, most of us spend at least three hours reading our local newspaper.

Besides current news, most of us want to keep in touch with what's happened in the worlds of science, philosophy and social progress, which requires reading national magazines. Even if we confine that branch of our reading to skimming through the Reader's Digest, that adds at least three more hours a week to our sessions with the printed page.

And of course we want to read some fiction and some current books, which can use up as much time as we want to spend on them, but which would take at least ten hours per week to cover any ground at all.

Those of us who are farmers or are in a profession know that we should spend at least one evening a week reading about developments in our particular field.

So far, that's a total of 34 hours of reading a week—just to cover one infinitesimal part of the things which are written for our edification and entertainment.

When we add those 34 hours to the 56 we should spend sleeping, the 21 we should spend eating, and the 40 at least we must spend working, only 17 hours remain of a week for the hundred and one miscellaneous tasks and visits which make demands on our time.

Obviously, if we hope to be well-read, we must put our time on a very strict budget.

MACHINERY MODELS STAGE OWN SHOW

With the defense program causing a shortage in farm labor and also an expanded production along some lines, farmers are going to find the Oregon state fair farm machinery show has grown by leaps and bounds in recent years, and is now the biggest and best farm machinery display in the Northwest. Officials of the fair, which starts Labor day and closes September 7, are proud to invite the farmers of Oregon to this exhibit.

Every big machinery concern will have a practical display on the fair grounds. Many working exhibits will be seen and the newest models of all kinds of farm equipment and machinery will be displayed, with someone on hand to answer any questions. While this show is designed for the farmer, thousands of city fellows get a thrill out of viewing the machinery arena.

Besides machinery, the show includes tools of every kind and irrigation equipment, pumps, and other devices which make the farm go 'round.
