THE HOME TOWN

"My home town is the place where my children are educated, where my business is situated and where my vote is cast; where my neighbors dwell and where my life is chiefly lived. It is my home spot for me. My town has the right to my civic loyalty. It supports me and I should support it.

My town wants my citizenship, not my partisanship; my friendliness, not my dissension; my sympathy, not my criticism; my intelligence, not my indifference. My town supplies me with protection, trade, friends, education, schools, churches, and the right to free, moral citizenship. It has done things that are better than others; the best things I should seek to make better, the worse things I should help to suppress. Take it all-in-all, it is my town, and it is entitled to the best there is in me."

The unprecedented number of requests for information relative to establishment of pasture crops received by the County Agents' office at Oregon City indicate a large increase in pasture acreage in Clackamas County this fall, according to County Agent, J. J. Inskip, who offers suggestions for planting grass and legume seeds many of which are comparatively new crops for this area.

Several factors are responsible for this sudden increase in pasture crops. Pastures are great labor savers, an important item in these days of farm labor scarcity. Good grass mixtures eliminate many troublesome weeds such as Canada thistles. A good pasture mixture is the best insurance against erosion on hillsides. Green pastures afford nature's best livestock feed, and last but not least, Clackamas County stockmen are finding that good pastures are often more profitable per acre than hay.

Early fall planting of pasture grasses and legumes on firm seedbeds is desirable. Planting before the middle of September is the best insurance against winter injury and early plantings always furnish earlier pasture and more forage the first season than later plantings. Grass seeds are small and many stands are ruined by planting at a depth greater than one and a half inches. Seed barely covered on a firm seedbed usually produces the best results.

Every pasture mixture should be built around the legume used, for pasture grasses require as much nitrogen as grain crops and the use of legumes in the mixture is nature's way of gathering nitrogen from the air, and of fixing it in a form which the grass can use. Legumes are great users of lime and phosphate. Whenever possible limestone requirement should be met before planting. And in every case it is desirable to use a hundred pounds of triple phosphate or two to three hundred pounds of 18 per cent super phosphate per acre at time of planting.

When barnyard manure is available this valuable fertilizer may be used as a top dressing after the seed is planted. The same is true of straw. These top dressings of barnyard manure and straw afford protection from winter injury and stimulate the growth of the grasses in other ways, some of which are not entirely clear. While many different seed mixtures may be satisfactory, it seems desirable to use locally grown seeds of which there are none better for local conditions.

The following mixtures are suggested for various conditions. The numbers indicate the recommended number of pounds of seed per acre.

For permanent pastures on well drained or moderately well drained soils.

Tall fescue six pounds, chewing fescue three pounds, English or Italian rye grass three pounds, Subterranean Clover three to four pounds.

For pastures on burned over stump land two pounds of red creeping fescue or one pound of highland bent grass may be substituted for an equal number of pounds of tall fescue. These two grasses are desirable sod formers but difficult to eradicate on cultivated land.

Permanent pastures for wet land. Tall fescue five pounds, English rye grass six pounds, alsike clover two pounds, white clover one pound. Two to three pounds of subterranean clover should be added on soil dry enough to grow winter oats. When available four pounds of meadow foxtail may be substituted for part of the tall fescue and part of the rye grass. Meadow foxtail is the most palatable of all grasses.

Temporary pastures. Subterranean Clover four pounds and Italian rye grass eight pounds or crimson clover ten pounds and Italian rye grass six to eight pounds. Some prefer to use both crimson clover and subterranean clover.

The clover in these mixtures should be inoculated. Hairy Vetch screenings may be added to the permanent pasture mixtures

Air Raid Alarm

"If" air alarms are ever sounded in the U. S., the device being examined above by Mayor LaGuardia (right) and David Sarnoff, head of RCA, will be used to notify radio listeners. It can be incorporated into standard radio sets and is so devised that a bell will ring upon reception of an inaudible signal from the radio station.
