HOOD LOOP DESERVES ATTENTION—

This newspaper has frequently called attention to the fact that the Hood Loop highway is one of the most used thoroughfares in Oregon and that the section between Portland and Government Camp is a particularly congested stretch of road much of the time. Not only does this route carry one of the state's largest traffic loads of recreation seekers, but it also carries a tremendous load of business traffic from central, eastern and southern Oregon.

Opening a couple of years ago of the new Wapinitia cutoff has vastly increased both the business and tourist traffic coming over the pass at Government Camp and down into the valley via Sandy and Gresham. Completion of a new strip of highway between Madras and Prineville and renumbering highway 50 and several other roads as highway 26, a new transcontinental route, is bound to increase traffic on this road by new leaps and bounds.

It is time that the Oregon highway commission swings into action to bring this heavily traveled arterial into up-to-date condition. It is at present but a 2-lane highway with several too narrow bridges and far too many sharp curves. These curves frequently bottleneck traffic on week ends and constantly present an unnecessary hazard to life and limb.

The curves are particularly bad, yet easy to remedy, in the Cherryville neighborhood. Preliminary surveys have been made in that area and they indicate that about 3 miles of comparatively easy new construction is all that would be needed to correct the situation in that area. Yet, it is reported there are no plans to proceed with this work.

If members of the highway commission or its engineers resided in this area and could hear night after night, as do local residents the wail of ambulance sirens as they dash up the hill and back with maimed victims of accidents on the loop highway, we believe they would take action in a hurry. And the accidents are not confined to the nights. During heavy traffic periods of week ends they are almost as numerous in the daylight hours. Nor are all of them caused by drunken or reckless drivers.

The time for action is now. This road is of sufficient importance to all the state that it merits top priority for a major overhauling from the proceeds of the bond issues now in progress for improvement of Oregon highways.

WHAT KIND OF TEACHERS?—

Lawrence A. Kimpton, chancellor of the University of Chicago, hit right at the middle of one of the important current controversies concerning education when, in a talk to the City Club of Portland last Friday, he declared that the Chicago school is graduating many teachers but that it does not teach them "how to teach" subjects. Instead, Dr. Kimpton declared, we teach them what to teach.

We would like to have a dollar for every time in recent months we have heard educators, including administrators, classroom teachers, board of education members and former teachers, say that they wish the "big shots" of education would return to the fundamental practice of preparing prospective teachers for their jobs by giving them a thorough grounding in the subjects they plan to teach rather than to waste most of the prospect's college years filling their craniums with a lot of bunk on "teaching methods." We'll venture that 99 out of 100 recent graduates of normal schools will join in the chorus of the many we have heard exclaim, "Why we didn't learn how to teach until after a year or two on the job—and we still are learning the source material we should have received as part of our teacher training."

Most teachers, the successful ones at least, also will stand 100 percent behind the idea that there is no substitute for discipline and work in the education of children. There is startling agreement among successful teachers that this so-called "modern" concept of letting the child find his own way around and learn what, if and when he pleases is just so much bunk. Likewise, these is also an amazing degree of agreement that the greatest success in educating our children can be attained only when the instructor is fully prepared with knowledge of the subjects to be taught and has the ability and wisdom to guide the child into a real interest in those subjects.

It is no easy assignment and next to proper grounding of the teacher through more attention to material to be taught than to methods, the reduction of classroom loads is the most effective instrument in accomplishing it.

There has been a great tendency in recent years to misuse the words "modern" and "progressive" in describing the techniques of teaching which actually are regressive in their results so far as the pupils are concerned. It is heartening to hear so outstanding an educator as Dr. Kimpton point up that fact in the concise manner he did in his talk in Portland last week. It would be a good thing if educators of that caliber could speak to every parent group in the land and thus help keep American public education on the right track.

REMEY WILL BE MISSED—

The sudden death at his home in Prineville on February 5 of Remy Cox, editor and publisher of the Prineville Central Oregonian, removed from the Oregon newspaper scene one of its able and well-loved leaders and from the Prineville community a man who has contributed vastly to the growth and development of that area.

It was typical of Remy Cox that death should come almost on the heels of some activity in the interest of his home community. He had long known the state of his health was not good, yet he continued to work ardently and enthusiastically for every project to develop and improve the place in which he lived. He had returned to his home only a few hours before his death from the annual meeting of the Pioneer Memorial Hospital, at which he had been chosen president for the 2nd consecutive year. It was one of the many community projects close to his heart and in which he had been a spark plug since its inception.

Remy Cox will be sorely missed in his home town. He will be equally missed by his colleagues in the newspaper business who never failed to find him a source of new spirit and inspiration whenever they gathered at conventions, sessions or in small groups to talk shop. Remy had a way of going straight to the heart of things and coming up with right answers that endeared him to all his fellow publishers. It was a way that undoubtedly contributed much to making him an outstanding newspaper man from all angles. He had run the gamut of newspaper experience, from top reporting tasks on news wire services, editing a large city daily to finding his great satisfaction and we think his greatest achievement in the editing and publishing of a fine, small community weekly newspaper.

TAFT BANISHES SKEPTICISM—

They came with skepticism. They saw and heard the subject of their skepticism. They went away convinced that he was "their man."

That virtually tells the story of hundreds of the some 3,500 people who attended the annual Lincoln Day banquet of Multnomah county Republicans and listened to Sen. Robert A. Taft, senator from Ohio and candidate for his party's presidential nomination at the civic auditorium in Portland last Wednesday night.

Many of those who attended had the feeling that Taft was a cold, poker-stiff sort of an individual who, despite great ability and integrity, lacked the personal warmth to win confidence and friendship of the people and thus to win votes and with them, an election. Not a one who came with that conception left with the same feeling. The Ohio senator proved to be a man of real warmth, affable and charming by nature. It was no effort for him to appear friendly and close to the people. It was obvious that such is his nature.

Quite naturally, a new clamor for Taft to enter the Oregon primary contest and to make a real campaign in Oregon has resulted from his short visit to the state. Many of those who have been his staunch supporters all of the time but have acquiesced to other judgment on the primary election matter now are all out in their desire for him to become an active candidate. Many others who have been skeptical of Taft's ability to win in the fall now are convinced that he does have that ability and that he can and should demonstrate it by taking on any and all comers in an Oregon primary campaign which would be an important stepping stone both to his party's nomination and to victory in November.

A few more years of "social advancement in this country and we'll all be working for the state—with a dictator as the boss.

A lot of fellows who are meeting payrolls every week are looking with envy at those whose salaries they pay now that the year-end totting up has been completed.

Leonard Lindas, Clackamas county district attorney, has announced his candidacy for the republican nomination for attorney general of Oregon. He would make a good one, and should be a formidable candidate for the nomination. Mr. Lindas has made an enviable record as Clackamas district attorney and he would carry to the attorney general's office the same strong will to enforce the laws of the state adequately and impartially. The state's gain would be Clackamas county's loss.

Chapel Chatter ---

By Mrs. G. G. Hathorn
A missionary conference is scheduled at the Baptist Chapel the week of April 27. There will be many good speakers.

Howdy Folks:

If a flapper says she will go 50-50, she means she will furnish the appetite if you will furnish the food.

—:—
Which proves the statement made by Sandy's most eligible young bachelor, that when a girl looks pretty enough to eat she usually does.

—:—
If your stomach is upset you should eat your dessert first.
