

Drug Labeling Laws Due For Rigid Regulations

According to a news item in the Oregon State Board of Health Bulletin, the Federal Food and Drug Administration has proposed stronger regulations governing samples of new drugs sent to private physicians for prescriptions to patients.

The new regulation would: 1. Require sweeping changes in the labeling of prescription drugs. Virtually all prescription drug packages and printed matter distributed to physicians to promote sale of a drug would be required to bear complete information for professional use of the drug including information about any hazards, side effects or necessary precautions.

FDA said that heretofore such fully detailed information has not been required in labeling when it was available to the physician upon request. The only exception in the proposed regulations would apply to frequently used medicines that are commonly familiar to the doctor.

2. Provide that when safety requires, a new drug would be kept off the market until the manufacturer's representation regarding the reliability of manufacturing methods, facilities and controls have been confirmed by a factory inspection by the Food and Drug Administration.

Such an inspection would verify that the firm can insure the identity, strength, quality and purity of each batch of the drug. Occasional inspections have shown conditions in manufacturing plants which were contrary to representations made by the manufacturer in his request for safety clearance, according to FDA.

Other proposed labeling changes would require for injection and for use in the eyes to bear a quantitative declaration of all inactive ingredients. Labels of all prescription drugs would be required to include an "identifying lot or control number from which it is possible to determine the complete manufacturing history of the drug." Exemptions are permitted where there is insufficient label space provided the information is given on other parts of the package. All labeling bearing information off use of a drug would be required to have the date of its issuance. FDA said the proposed labeling changes would correct a tendency on the part of some manufacturers to describe to physicians the merits of a drug without giving information regarding its hazards and the special precautions necessary for maximum safety and effectiveness.

George P. Larrick, Commissioner of Food and Drugs said: "The large number of new medications has made it increasingly difficult for doctors and pharmacists to keep adequately informed about them. We are hopeful that the proposed regulations will improve the communication of vitally necessary information and bring about a general improvement in drug promotion practices. At the same time, they should furnish a basis for more effective government control where necessary."

School. Well, it is close to that time again. Children have to think of the time being so close but mothers—well, it's something else again. . . .

For about 8 years now the neighbor and I relaxed together after the kids were off to school but now she is working out and yours truly hopes to be. Even that will be changed.

Then there is the first year of school for two little girls near here. Do tears come to mothers' eyes when she sees the last one off to that adventure which is an entirely new world for the young ones?

We take all this for granted but what if there were no free public schools? Do we cherish our right to have a free education (free money-wise and more important—free in the democratic sense) and all our rights and privileges as Americans.

Let's pause and thank God for them.

So often in the past when there was no thanksgiving for these very rights they were suddenly removed from these past civilizations. School may seem to the young to be like a prison but behind the iron or bamboo curtain there must be countless young people who would gladly change places. There are even those in our country who foolishly by-passed an education when young who would give anything to have another chance. So, kids, welcome school as a privilege which has been so given you and prepare yourselves to make your place in the great American traditions of democracy in a world which is facing the greatest test it has ever faced. You need every bit of education that it is possible to obtain.

Four Farms In County Make 'Century' List

SALEM—Clackamas county with four, leads the list of 18 Oregon farms qualifying this year for Century Farm honors under the program sponsored by the Oregon Historical Society and the State department of agriculture. Eight counties are represented.

Initiated three years ago, the program has now enrolled 416 farms that have been owned and operated continuously in the same family for 100 years or more.

"Our Century Farms become more select than ever this year. But it is with pleasure that we welcome 18 new members to the fraternity of farms and families enrolled in this unique program." So stated J. F. Short, agricultural director, and Thomas Vaughan, historical society director, as they announced the honor roll.

Clackamas county: Sidney E. Baker, Route 2, Box 183A, Sherwood; Mrs. Bertha Vaughan Johns, route 2, Box 539, Molalla, established in 1844 Richard G. Palmateer, Route 1, Box 121, Estacada; William H. Tucker, Route 2, Box 95, Estacada.

As in past years, the Century Farm program will climax this year at a special program at Oregon State Fair. This will be held Tuesday, September 6, with Governor Mark O. Hatfield slated to present scroll to the honored farmers, whose applications were certified by their respective county courts.

Joining in the special ceremonies will be Century Farmers named in 1958 and 1959. A special luncheon honoring the Century Farmers present at the Fair will be sponsored by the Oregon-Washington Farmers Union, the Oregon State Grange and the Oregon Farm Bureau Federation.
