The beginning of the new year seems to trigger off a rash of meetings to be held during the next two or three months. Of course one reason for this being the "season of meetings" is the fact that most farm operators are a little more free to be away from the place for a spell without everything going to pot.

We in the Extension office try to be ever mindful that everyone's busy and that the only good reason to justify holding an informational meeting for (or with) growers is to have some factual and up-to-date information to present or some ideas to share that might help you do a better job.

The day when a meeting was held just for the sake of saying one held a meeting, is long gone.

Of course by now you realize that I've been trying to "condition" you to the fact that we've got some meetings planned and we hope that you will be able to attend. May we remind you of some of these again.

Jan. 16 — Fruit Growers

COUNTY EXTENSION AGENT

Plant Physiology Short Course, 7:30 p.m., Sherwood Grange Hall. This is the first of a series of six sessions to be held each Wednesday night. Agent Dave Passon is heading this up for our office.

Jan. 24 — Soils Short Course to be held each Thursday thru Feb. 21 at the Armory in Gresham. Time 9:30 to 3 p.m. and will be of greatest interest to growers in the north end of Clackamas county. (This is much like the soils session held at Rural Dell a couple of years ago.)

Feb. 28 and 29 — North Willamette Horticulture Society meeting at the Armory in Gresham. This is a joint project with Clackamas and Multnomah county cooperating. This meeting should be a dandy so be sure to mark this on your calendar.

These are only the short-course type meetings. There will be other one-day and half-day meetings held at other times and places around the county, too.

OREGON STATE

A brand new year lies ahead for Oregon's hunters and fishermen. And if the coming year provides the success and enjoyment of the one just past, we can all look forward with optimism to a full year of great hunting and fishing.

In retrospect, we can look back on old 1962 as a good one for devotees of rod and gun. From all corners of the state, reports indicate anglers had one of their better years. Some of the highlights include almost fabulous fishing at the popular East and Paulina lakes. Prineville reservoir, a new impoundment coming into its own, produced fish in excellent numbers.

So did Bull Prairie lake, a new impoundment built by the game commission south of Heppner, and Morgan lake out of La Grande.

Another fine producer of trout last summer was Howard Prairie in the Medford country. Squaw lakes, Fish lake and Willow creek reservoir in southwest Oregon all proved productive last season.

Diamond lake anglers were somewhat disappointed with this famed body of water until late season when it suddenly came alive and produced trout in excellent numbers.

Steens Angling
Fish lake in the Steens provided exciting angling, and there was no letup in the almost fantastic numbers of fish that came out of the majestic Wallowa mountain country.

The pack-in lakes along the Cascade crest yielded many tasty fish dinners, and the lake basin area of central Oregon was as productive as ever.

Salmon anglers enjoyed a good season in most waters of the state. Undoubtedly the big Columbia was the top producer, but excellent reports were received from most popular salmon angling areas.

Willamette spring chinook anglers had a somewhat disappointing season, the result of a low run of springers which moved up the river.

The steelhead season, too, was a good one, with several rivers producing top numbers of the big sea-going rainbow trout. The Rogue was reported excellent for summer steelhead, and the Deschutes fair. Winter steelheaders reported excellent for summer.
