The Race Isn't Always to the Swift

We read an article the other day which compared the "snail's pace" Oregon legislature to that in Washington which "got the job done much faster." The author must not have done his home work.

In the first place, there's real doubt that the Washington state legislature ever does get much done. Just look at the financial condition of our neighbor to the north.

And in the second place, the Washington legislators are no supermen, getting the job done in half the time.

Sure, the legislative session does last just 60 days per the state constitution. But just as sure as the legislators come to Olympia, they end up with a special session.

They did it again last Friday, for the 8th time in the last 9 legislative years. Only in 1957 did the legislators finish up on time and if memory serves correctly, they did it that time by "stopping the clock" and going on for some days to wind up their business.

Washington state legislators have come to count upon a special session. They leave important measures hanging fire every time and finish them up during the extra session. This year, the two notable omissions were an appropriation bill and one for legislative redistricting.

The pace in Salem may be slower but, we're sure, much less hectic. A synthetic 60-day session, like that in Washington, would be completely meaningless. And in the final analysis, accomplishment—not time spent—is what counts.

'Life' Should Mean 'Life'

The cause of those seeking abolition of the death penalty here in Oregon was not helped by a decision last week in San Jose.

A jury there sentenced Dr. Geza Dekaplay to life imprisonment for the acid torture murder of his wife. But in California, as in Oregon, this means seven years. At least, he will be eligible for parole in seven years.

The murder of Mrs. Dekaplay was a particularly revolting thing. She was stripped, tied and then acid poured over her body. Some 33 days later she died. Dekaplay had suspected his wife of being unfaithful.

For this, he gets seven years. Here in Oregon, capital punishment is, of course, a part of the state's constitution and can be removed only after (a) legislative action and (b) a vote of the people.

Several different bills have been inroduced in the legislature to do away with the death penalty. Gov. Mark Hatfield is numbered among their supporters.

But the specter of persons like Dekaplay serving only seven years may be a powerful argument for retention of the death penalty. A measure by Sen. Don Willner (D) of Portland would set 15 years as the minimum sentence for first-degree murder.

Another measure, submitted by Sen. Thomas R. Mahoney (D), also of Portland, would substitute life imprisonment for the death penalty but his bill would mean "life." No parole would be possible.

Mahoney's measure might be approved by the voters. We feel that most people (despite the recent Journal poll) don't believe in capital punishment and would gladly see it go if a life sentence indeed meant "life."

And not seven years.

Bill Dyal (father) and Hal Dyal both won medals wrestling at Corvallis last Saturday. Dad's was silver second place medal in AAU heavyweight match. Son Hal took bronze third place award in high school meet, making him eligible for summer training session. Winners of this will go to Japan on wrestling tour.

Father, Son Take Medals

Sandy's Hal Dyal placed third in the high school wrestling meet at Corvallis last Saturday and was awarded a bronze medal. On the same day his father, Bill Dyal, placed second in heavyweight wrestling at the AAU open meet which was also held in Corvallis. He was awarded a silver medal.

Other wrestlers from Sandy high taking part in the meet were Vic Byrd and Cal McKin-

Participants from the entire state were competing in the high school event for a chance to go to a 10-day summer training session at Corvallis. Hal Dyal, as one of the top three winners Saturday, will have this opportunity. Those who come out on top at the training session will go to Japan for a month's tour of wrestling the Japanese high school boys in their weight class.

C. C. OKAYS SURVEY

The Oregon State Employment Service has been given the "go-ahead" by the Sandy Area Chamber of Commerce on its proposed manpower skill survey. The state agency will conduct the survey, but had asked for a sponsoring vote by the local chamber.

O. Hull Officers Meet Commission

Six officers and board members of the Oral Hull Foundation for the Blind attended a recent meeting of the Oregon Commission for the Blind at which a discussion of the Oral Hull Foundation was on the agenda.

Attending the meet were Judge George Howeler, Duane Knapp, Pete Zandell, Dave Starks, Mrs. Frances Lloyd and Mrs. Florence Carroll. Howeler reports that the Oregon Commission for the Blind has offered their full cooperation to the Oral Hull Foundation.

Howeler also said that the Future Farmers organization of Sandy high has been pruning trees at Oral Hull park site and is planning to put in a fence. The group of some 15 boys, under the direction of Carl Stauffer of Sandy high, is proving to be a very fine help to the organization. Howeler said.

Members and friends of the Foundation are going to construct a parking area at the park site and will grade and gravel it starting this weekend.

Howeler says that membership cards and certificates have been printed and may be obtained at his office on Proctor Ave. in Sandy or from any board member of the organization.
