Pioneer Days

By LILLIAN TEN EYCK

One thing hasn't changed since by-gone days and that is the skunk population. There are so many out our way that Skunk Hill, rather than Topfields, would be a more fitting name for the TenEyck farm. A big one strolled by recently and our German Shepherd (ever alert) treed him in our woodshed while the mister and I suffered. Come morning a 30-30 put and end to the skunk but not the smell.

"Did you ever smell a worse one?" I asked. That was all that was needed to recount a tale of early days and a small boy's mischief.

"On a fishing expedition, I got what I wanted but it wasn't a fish. One spring day when I was eight or nine, I was fishing along our little creek as usual. I had started (perhaps) a half mile above our house and fished down. Into the bank on one side of the creek, Dad had dug out quite a good sized cave where in the fall he stored potatoes, turnips, rutabagas and any thing else that freezing would spoil. When spring came the cellar was cleaned out and the door left open to air out.

On this day I smelled skunk mighty strong and I figured there was probably one in the cave. I cautiously peeped in the open door and, sure enough, there was a big fellow digging in one corner. Now I had heard a lot of argument about skunks. Some folks said his smell was a highly inflammable gas and if a match was lighted anywhere near him there would be an explosion. Others said "Sure the skunk smells awful but that doesn't mean he's dynamite."

I thought, "Here's where I find out who is right about that smell!" Dropping my fish pole and fish, I first let down the swing door of the cave; then I hurried away to cut a long pole from a bunch of alders. Sneaking into the woodshed, as I knew my mother wouldn't approve my plan, I fastened to my pole. Then I had to have a match which we, children weren't allowed to have. Peeping into the kitchen, I saw mother was in the adjoining room with the younger children, so very quietly I reached on a shelf and got two matches in case the first one went out.

Then I hurried back to the cave. Lighting the paper, then lifting the door, I pushed the stick in as far as I could when bang the whole room was lighted up. I let the door down in a hurry but the smell was simply terrible; burned skunk smell, burned fur. The whole combination made me mighty sick, but after things quieted down a little and I had gained my sea legs, as it were, I went in and finished that skunk with a club which wasn't hard to do as he seemed pretty groggy. Anyway that one wouldn't steal any more of our chickens.

Barker Joins Rexall Staff

Jerry Barker has returned to Sandy to work permanently at the Rexall Drug. He served his pharmacist internship at the store, working there from June of 1959 until June of 1960. He liked Sandy so well that he chose it as a future home. He will move here soon with his wife, Nancy, and 2 children, Evan, 2 1/2, and Dean, 6 weeks.

Sandy Woman Tours Europe

Martha Williams, Sandy, returned last Thursday from a 28 day tour of Europe.

On the tour were 450 Eastern Star members from all over United States. While on tour they visited England, Scotland, France, Germany, Austria, Italy, Holland and Monaco.

Highlights of the trip included being in St. Peter's Square in Rome and seeing the Pope and being blessed by him and a trip through the canals of Venice in a gondola. While in London they witnessed the changing of the guard and visiting Westminster Abbey. In France, Martha visited the Louvre, the Palace of Versailles, and the beautiful gardens surrounding the Palace.

Martha is employed at the Sandy Rexall Drug Store.

The Common-Sense Car

Compact in the front Compact in the rear

full-size in the living room

Studebaker is a full-size car . . . but only where it counts—inside. In the front and in the rear, it's compact. And, the result is that it handles like a small car, but gives you the comfort of a large one.

You can stretch your legs out in a Studebaker. You don't have to crane your neck forward to keep your head from hitting the roof. And, it's built to accommodate six people—three in front and three in back—in comfort.
