Nell's Notes
By NELL HOWE
Hood-Land Reporter

Blanche Ness has a houseful, and a mighty happy person she is. Her son Gary, with wife and family, are here on a visit. Now Blanche can enjoy those grandchildren she's been wanting to spoil. Gary is here from Hawaii.

Went into the big city and spent a lovely Mothers Day with my daughter and family. They took me out to dinner, and who should we see, but Billy and Millie Lenz, with Millies mother, Minnie Reed, and Bill's mother, Helen Lenz. Hope I can look as good as Helen and Minnie do when I add a couple of more years.

Browsing through some more historical items, and discovered that E. Henry Wemme, purchased the first automobile in Oregon, which he purchased in 1899. The car is believed to have been an Apperson. (That's a new one on me) This is a little note written about the new car. Better Than Horses -- The automobile which made its appearance here a few days ago was meandering about town yesterday and attracted considerable attention. It runs very smoothly and noiselessly and is all right for those who like such things, but to people who have driven horses all their lives it don't look quite right. It is too dead easy a game, said an old driver of 2 nags, yesterday; there is no life or excitement about it. Give me a pair of good horses that will pull on the lines and with tails over the dashboard and whip in the socket, give dust to everyone in the road, there is some life and some fun in that. The cost of such a team and the expense of feeding and caring for them spoils the fun of driving them for many, and there is nothing to prevent racing with automobiles as well as horses. Rainy weather and muddy roads are not favorable to the use of automobiles, and there is always a possibility of a blow-up. A slight accident of this kind occurred on board Mr. Wemme's machine a few days ago, which caused no damage, however, beyond scorching the woodwork. (Just makes us realize how dangerously we are living, driving these infernal machines. Boy would Mr. Wemme, get shook up at the speed we travel now.)

If you haven't had the opportunity to read Dr. Ivan Woolleys' book, Off To Mt. Hood, then you have missed a real treat. It is a delightful history of this country, from the time the first stages ran out here. That's while I feel like one of the lucky ones, cause I traveled on some of those stages, and it would take us almost the entire day to arrive at the Tawney Hotel, where we originally spent every summer. From the book there is a delightful description of Welches resort, as it was then known. Approximately one-half mile above Wemme, at the old Welches School, those enroute to Welches and Tawney's turned sharply to the right. This road was a straight, narrow lane for almost a mile, planked in some places and rutty and dusty in others. At the end of this line there was a sharp left turn as the road angled downward a hundred yards or so across the face of the hill to reach the floor of the little valley in which the resort nestled.
