A Plug for "Vote"

For anyone who wants to do a thoughtful job of voting at the coming election, we strongly urge that they acquire a copy of "Vote."

"Vote" is the election report put out by the League of Women Voters. Some 35,000 were printed (at the Outlook, incidentally) by the Multnomah County units.

By all odds, "Vote" contains the best summary of candidates and issues which we've seen. It should, by all means, be on the "must" list of every voter.

P.S. Copies are only 10c.

The Case for Community Colleges (Plural)

A report by the Post-High School Study Committee, released last week, "strongly recommends" just one community college district in the Portland Metropolitan area.

At first blush, this sounds like the same tiresome refrain heard from Portland papers and Portland school officials when Mt. Hood was being formed.

However, this report is from a blue-ribbon committee which has been at work for over a year. Its recommendations will carry considerable weight.

Even so, we don't think the report is sacrosanct. There are flaws.

In the first place, the report ignores the fact that in 10 years there will be a half dozen community colleges in the Portland area of 4,000-5,000 students each.

The report suggests that by creating one monolithic college, "duplication of courses and fragmentation can be eliminated."

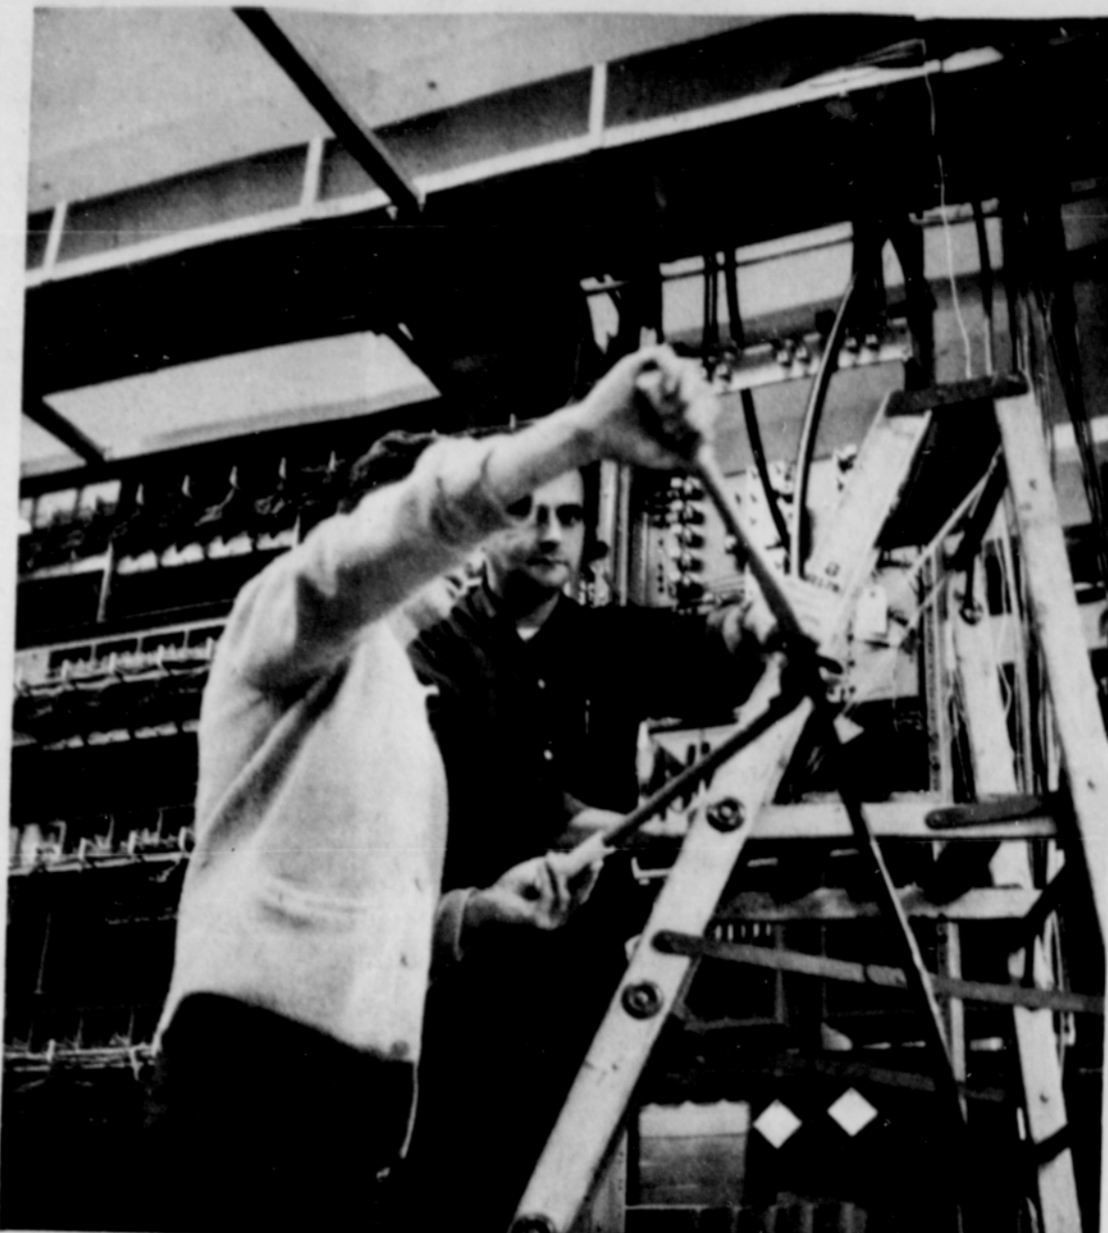

But with a college of 5,000 students, you're still going to have to offer just about everything. Schools of this size couldn't possibly offer a limited curriculum.

Furthermore, the report looks only at Portland and its immediate surroundings. It ignores, for instance, the fact that Mt. Hood has a 900-square mile territory and a student who lives east of Sandy is going to have quite a hike to get to Portland's Mt. Sylvania campus (near Beaverton).

The report also overlooks the importance of local participation, local identity with a college. The average citizen living in East County would have absolutely no say when it comes to determining how a monolithic school in Portland should be operated. But he does have much to say about Mt. Hood today.

To put it bluntly, solving Portland's community college problems is no concern of Mt. Hood or the Clackamas county community college district. And that's precisely the direction in which the report seems aimed.

The Post's subscription campaign ended Saturday night in a flurry of excitement and suspense. Excitement, as youngsters, racing right to the wire, rushed in with last minute subscriptions just ahead of the 6 p.m. deadline. Suspense, as they waited nervously outside the locked office door for over two hours while campaign judges, Kathleen O'Brien and Gerry Barker, carefully checked and tallied scores before posting the final standings.

Joins Sorority

Connie L. Schwendemann, Boring, was recently initiated into Chi Omega national sorority on the Willamette University campus.

At Willamette she is a sophomore majoring in political science.

It goes without saying that the top prize winners were happy with the results, but the disappointment of those who did not win a major prize was forgotten when their commission earnings were figured (all but the five top winners received a 15% commission on sales), and everyone went home happy.

We were happy too, when we found that the Post now has an all time record number of subscribers....2,987!

Canby's Mayor, Fred Stefani, republican candidate for county commissioner made quite an impression when he talked to the Sandy Chamber of Commerce meeting Tuesday. An experienced business man, with past experience on the County Commission, Stefani spoke with authority on county problems and gave several examples of how the taxpayer's money could be saved in the administration of county government. The saving of tax money rather than the spending of it appeals strongly to my "Yes" vote, Fred!

If there is a will, there is a way...and I feel this relates to George Coleman's desire to obtain a college education. He works from 3 p.m. to midnight, then catches a few hours of sleep before attending his 8 a.m. morning class at University of Portland. Following morning classes, he returns home to his North Portland apartment to get ready for his "working day". For those who feel "it couldn't be done"...well...George is doing it!

"We don't know where we live!" This remark was made recently by Cliff and Charlotte Savaria, with this explanation. The road they lived on, used to be called Miller Road...then since Erickson built the road, residents of the area decided to change the name of the road to Erickson Road. This change was accepted, and the sign was changed to read "Erickson Road". Later a letter was received from the Clackamas County Commissioners stating that "no street could be named after a person"...but the sign remained up, since a person was also responsible for the name of Miller Road. Now no one knows what the street is named. Recently Cliff and Charlotte received a letter addressed to them at "Savaria Drive--providing Clackamas County Planning Commission approves, Sandy, Oregon". The letter from out-of-state had no problem reaching them at that address, - so now they are wondering "where do we live?" Happy Birthday today to Chuck Moody!

Members of the judging teams are as follows: Dairy judging - Linda Moore, Boring; Joan Livermore, Canby and Dave Koellmer, Wilsonville. Meat animal judging - Linda Alexander, Shubel; Steve Lippincott, Canby and Jim Kuhl, West Linn. Horse judging - Patty Nagel, Milwaukie; Sharon Gantenbein, Boring; and Nancy Taylor, Lake Oswego. These members placed highest in judging contests held in the county during the past spring or summer. They will compete in Portland against teams from five states.

Members of the 4 Bar H Horse Club, Concord; Bar None 4-H Beef Club, Sunnyside; and Winged Hooves 4-H Horse Club at Sunnyside will hold animals for some of the judging contests.

Other 4-H members will also have a part in the P.I. Thirty-six members of Emblem Club, the county-wide organization for older 4-H members, will help with the "See and Touch Barnyard" on Sunday, October 16. This is a special area where young children can pet and feed and get better acquainted with farm animals.

Don't forget the Open House of Gib and Rita Oldenkamp's new home in Molalla next Sunday between the hours of 1 and 5 p.m. The Oldenkamps hope to see all of their Sandy friends there. For directions to their home on Shirley Street, phone Rita at 829-2904.

James and Frances McLain celebrated their 41st wedding anniversary Oct. 10th.

Wonder what you will see outside your door on Halloween night? For a general idea, stand in front of Ogden's Variety Store and visualize real faces peeping out through the rows of masks on display there...

Congratulations to Guy and Bev Buswell on their wedding anniversary last Saturday.

One season of the year begins without much fanfare...but there is no question about its beginning. Highway 26 is suddenly filled with campers, trailers, pickups, station-wagons, jeeps, motorcycles all heading for hunting grounds. Red and bright yellow hats become the "in" fashion. Many returned home empty-handed, but Lady Luck went with others.

Ray Reudi, his son-in-law Mike McCoy, and Ed Larson, a friend from Estacada, had luck the first day bagging two 4-point bucks in eastern Oregon.

Jim Solso was the only lucky hunter in the group consisting of Jim and Ursula Solso, Charles and Doris Lutz and Bob Whistler. Jim got a 3-point buck up the Clackamas. Last Monday night, Charles Lutz was showing his 29-inch span of horns from a prior hunting season, and already planning: "Next year, we'll go up where I got these big horns"...seems it was somewhere around Fossil.

Harold Edes saw "a lot of deer tracks completely obliterated by human tracks"...he is almost sure that all the traffic going through Sandy landed up where he was hunting near Prineville! I am sure many had the same thoughts in their favorite hunting grounds!

A 6-point buck was Loy Barker's prize from the Hepner area. Others in his hunting party, a "traditional hunting four-some": Ivan Barker and John Mills.

Ken Burdick, Les and Jerrie Wolf, Clark Wolf, and Gene and Nona Cook, chose a spot near Ritter and returned home with three bucks -- one 3-point, and two 2-points.

Other lucky hunters in this area include:

A hunting party of John Hilliard, John and Gertrude Harris and Claude and Pauline Dove returned home with 3 bucks.

Spike Emerson's group, I heard, got three deer. Also hear Slim and Lois Carpenter got "two nice ones", and Tom Gregson filled his tag.

Any more lucky Sandy area hunters this year?????

READERS THEATRE

Dave Spooner, speech and drama instructor, said that the MHCC Reader's Theatre is to have public performances Oct. 28 and 29 in the creative arts center. The hour-and-a-half presentation is to include four readings developed around the theme "The Hoodlums."

NEW COMMUNITY COLLEGES

In addition to Mt. Hood Community College, 44 other new two-year colleges began classes this Fall. There are now 816 such educational institutions in operation. The American Association of Junior Colleges reports that a total of 1.4 million students are in attendance at these colleges.

SYMPOSIUM

Colleges for Oregon's Future sponsored a state-wide symposium on problems of post-high school education and the outlook for the future in Portland on Monday and Tuesday. A major topic of discussion was the Oregon Master Plan for education beyond high school which was released last week.

Dr. Leo Marantes, MHCC dean of instruction, was on the symposium planning committee.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT

Students who desire to become officers in student government at Mt. Hood Community College must have better than average grades, according to the student affairs office. Although student government can be a meaningful learning experience for those who might be community leaders in a few years, it is vital that they maintain their better than average grade positions.

To the Editor:

Mr. George MacAlevy's column "From the River's Edge," is unusually interesting, informative and enjoyable reading. I am wondering if, from time to time, Mr. MacAlevy would consider answering, in his column, questions sent in by interested readers?

I am sure he would be most happy to do so...ed.

I enjoy reading the Sandy Post very much.

For I remember when I was a very young girl I had lots of fun when Sandy had such wonderful celebrations on the 4th of July down in the park of beautiful large fir trees. I heat they cut them down and I suppose took them away to the mill (shame!).
