

Boring job assumed by state

The Oregon State Highway Commission has approved a supplemental throughway agreement with the Clackamas County Board of Commissioners concerning the construction of the Boring Road Interchange Section of the Mt. Hood Highway.

Construction of the interchange will eliminate a very dangerous at-grade crossing of the Mt. Hood Highway.

The agreement generally provides for construction and maintenance of the project by the State. It covers all right-of-way acquisition, grading, paving, drainage, base, structure, and signing. Relocation of utility installations is covered by an agreement dated Sept. 20, 1962. Both the County and the State agree to the closing of Epperson Road as it presently exists.

The agreement stipulates that the County will continue to exercise all jurisdiction, maintenance, and control over the reconstructed portions of Boring and Epperson Roads.

Boring man to appeal

A Boring man who wants to put a trailer house on his property will appeal a turn-down by the Planning Commission to the County Commissioners at its meeting Wednesday.

Clifton A. Talley, Rt. 4, Box 685, Boring, said he wants a permit to use the trailer as a temporary residence on property near Old Highway 26, just south of the Epperson Road intersection. The planners denied the request because they contend the original permit was not being followed, which was to build a home.

VOTERS TURNED OUT in record numbers to defeat the proposed Sandy Grade School building bond levy. The issue was defeated 366 to 355 in voting Tuesday. Post Photo

Loses by 11 votes Voters turn down Sandy Grade levy

Voters in the Sandy Grade School District turned down a proposed building bond levy by a vote of 366 to 355 Tuesday.

The vote turnout on the proposed $863,575 bond levy was one of the highest ever in the district, according to school officials.

The bond had been for the addition of classrooms plus the remodeling of the kitchen and the enlargement of a library for the district.

With the failure of the bond by 11 votes, superintendent Tony Bryant said the question of how to handle the increasing number of students in the district goes back to the school board.

Bryant said there are four choices open to the board: resubmit the bond for another election as it is; submit a smaller bond levy to the voters; go to a double shift program in the lower grade levels; or move the district into a 12-month school program.

These alternatives had been discussed before the election and the school board and the school administration had all agreed that the bond levy as it was presented had been the best bet to handle the increasing student load in the

Parent neglect, few activities said cause area juvenile problems

By THOMAS TAYLOR News Editor

This article is the second in a series dealing with the juvenile problems in the Sandy-Hoodland area and Clackamas County.

Mrs. E. J. Greger and John Schleininger are the two juvenile case workers assigned to the Sandy-Hoodland area by the Clackamas County Juvenile Department.

"We both are in the Sandy-Hoodland area at least one day each week," said Schleininger. "Often times we will find ourselves in the area more times than that, especially during the summer months."

Both were involved this past summer in organizing programs for juveniles they were working with in the area.

"There are few programs for juveniles, especially girls, during the summer so it is important that the youngsters plan some activities they want to get involved with and then have them do these activities. It is one way which I feel I can best help a juvenile," stated Schleininger.

They also stated that the Sandy police have given them the best cooperation of any police force they deal with.

Compared to the other areas in the county the Sandy-Hoodland area ranks in the middle in number of referrals to the juvenile department.

Both juvenile workers stated that most youngsters referred from this area are at least 12-years old.

They stated that one major problem for juveniles in this area is getting transportation to where the action is.

"As far as one major problem of juveniles in the area, drinking alcohol has to be it," stated Schleininger.

Both he and Mrs. Greger said that they feel the drug problem in the Sandy area is less than in other parts of the county.

They feel that the youngsters go more for alcohol than for marijuana when seeking to "have fun."

Working through and with other organizations in the area is an important part of juvenile work. Both workers feel that the best thing often for a juvenile who is having problems is to get them involved in a program like residential manpower, Job Corp or into the military.

They also refer some cases to other organizations such as Welfare if they determine the problem can best be handled by them, rather than the juvenile department.

"We also seek to do a lot with the youngsters through local community programs. In the Sandy area we work with the Community Action Center," stated Schleininger.

The lack of any large scale organized recreational program in the area for both boys and girls was stressed as one reason why many juveniles get referred to the juvenile department.

"The biggest reason for juvenile problems is the lack of concern from parents for their youngsters," said Mrs. Greger.

Both said this is why when they deal with a juvenile problem it means dealing not only with the child, but also with the child's parents and his environment.

Schleininger said that he currently is meeting with youngsters on his case load at the Community Action Center. They have a group meeting and try to help each other solve their problems and also they plan activities which will give them a chance to have good clean legal fun.

This past summer the youngsters had such activities as motorcycle rides, camping and fishing trips and helped plant Christmas trees.

"We could not have had a successful program like this had it not been for several merchants who donated help to the group," said Schleininger.

He pointed out that during the summer none of the youngsters

Garbage can death case investigation continues

LeRoy Olinger, 18, was found dead in a garbage can Aug. 27. He had his hands strapped behind him and a section of chicken wire over the can, according to the person who found him.

A deputy sheriff who investigated the incident called it an experiment in ESP (extra sensory perception).

The medical examiner said death was caused by traumatic asphyxiation.

The boy's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Max H. Olinger, Rt. 2, Box 583, Boring, told The Outlook last week that they did not believe they had been told the whole story and feel that investigation into the case should be continued. Mr. Olinger said it had not been explained to his satisfaction how the chicken wire got over the top of the garbage can.

Several other things puzzle the Olingers. The boy had been dead about 24 hours before his body was discovered. This time spread was determined by a report from a neighbor and some children who said they had heard screams from the Olinger place the night of Aug. 26 (the night before he was found dead).

The Olingers were vacationing in Arizona and had been telephoning periodically to see if things were going well at home. On Aug. 27 they got no answer so called a neighbor who reported that the boy's car was in sight. However, she was puzzled that the sprinkler system had been on for a long period.

She got a neighbor to go with her to investigate. They found the boy's body in the garbage can.

A sheriff's deputy report at the time said that it could have been an experiment in ESP

Rook told The Outlook that he had made the request to the county sheriff and that Detective Sgt. Paul Congdon was assigned to the case. Congdon told The Outlook that he was continuing the investigation. He said he had yet found no conclusive evidence that homicide was involved but that could happen in most any case.

She said the deputy told her there were sex books in the boy's room. This she denies and says they were science fiction. All the books were from the public library, she says.

The boy had just been accepted as a student at Portland State University where he planned to study mathematics. He was a straight A student at Clackamas High School and a highly skilled chess player. He had been spending his Saturdays at OMSI working in the computer program.

Mr. Olinger feels a more thorough investigation should be made on the possibility of homicide. He said it was strange that there were no marks of a struggle around the garbage can. It was not tipped. There was some blood on pajama bottoms nearby which has not been explained to his satisfaction.

Another question is why two youths who had heard the screams were stopped by a sheriff's deputy as they were on their way to report what they had heard. They had been asked to testify, according to Olinger, then told to return home.

Ernest J. Buhlinger, attorney for the Olingers, told The Outlook that he had contacted the Clackamas County District Attorney Roger Rook asking him to investigate the case

Bull Run meeting delayed

The public meeting on the Larch Mountain-Bull Run Study Area is scheduled for Nov. 23 at 7:30 p.m. at the Glenfair Elementary School Cafeteria, 15300 N.E. Glisan.

This meeting is the result of responses from the public on the four alternatives for the Larch Mountain-Bull Run Area presented last May.

"Our original meeting date was scheduled for Oct. 19," said Joseph T. Stockbridge, district ranger. "However, the recent fire situation made a tremendous impact on our forest. Nearly two weeks time was lost from the regular work programs, affecting work being done on Larch Mountain-Bull Run and the rest of the study area."

"From the public's responses, we recognized that no one alternative would fulfill the needs and desires of the people. We are working now to resolve those conflicts," added Stockbridge.

Kiwanis collect Christmas boxes

The Sandy Kiwanis Club is again planning the distribution of Christmas food boxes to needy families of the Sandy area. As in past years, the club will be appealing for help from individuals and organizations throughout the community.

Sandy Kiwanians regard this project as a community affair. They take a leading role but without the generous aid of countless citizens and of community service minded organizations, it could not possibly succeed.

Clyde Sutherland and Wilbur 'Pete' Sulzbach are co-chairmen of the Christmas food box committee. They have reported, the Key Club at Sandy High School will again be asked to win the cooperation of Sandy High students in the collection of canned foods. Kiwanians will provide meat, fresh vegetables and some candy for each basket or box.

It has been customary in past years to include a gift for each child in the family along with each food box. Help in providing toys and suitable gifts will be greatly appreciated. Sandy firemen will provide a receiving station at the fire hall. The receiving station will be opened December 1st. Gifts should be wrapped. They should be marked as being 'boy' or 'girl' or for 'either boy or girl'. Gifts should also be marked to identify the age group for which they are most suited.

Mountain developments Police report four incidents in Sandy area

The Clackamas County planning commission will hold a public hearing concerning two development pattern changes in the Sandy River Corridor on Nov. 8 at 7:30 p.m. in the courthouse at Oregon City.

One hearing will concern a request for an amendment to the pattern for "potential residential", as it is now designated, to "potential commercial and/or multi-family residential."

This site is located on the southwest corner of Highway 26 and Welches Rd., in the Wemme area. It is where the old Welches Grade School was located.

This request had been scheduled for discussion at the planning commission meeting this month but was withdrawn.

The other hearing concerning the Hoodland area is a request to change from "potential residential" to "potential commercial."

The area concerned is on the south side of Highway 26, approximately 1/2 mile east of Welches Rd. The site is the previous home of Good Hood Wood Company.

The Sandy police reported four incidents during the past week.

On Oct. 14, Edward Curtis reported to the police a rock was thrown through his trailer house window at Rt. 3, Sandy. Slight damage was reported.
