

FROM THE RIVER'S EDGE

By George MacAlevy

THE WATER CHANGES

Just a few weeks ago I remarked on the effect of the low water in the streams accompanied with some warm weather. This produced mid-summer conditions in late spring as far as the fishing was concerned. Now the water has changed.

A week of off and on cold rains coupled with cool days and cold nights has reversed this condition. There is more water in the streams and it is colder water. The cool days have dampened the ability of the sun to warm the water. In our mountain rivers right now, early spring conditions prevail in early summer.

You were fishing the surface during the earlier warmer weather. Now you go back to trout opening conditions. Nymphs and wet flies are in order. If you fish bait, roll it along the bottom. The fish are not high enough in the water for the midwater drift to be productive. Too, the fishes metabolism is reduced by the colder water, so they are not so ready to take just anything. They are apt to be picky.

Once hit a situation like this while on vacation. The temperatures at night approached freezing. Days were alternately sunny and cloudy with a shower thrown in here and there. Cold rain was in those showers. When the sun was on the water, it looked like a perfect dry fly day, not a sign of a hatch, nor a dip from a feeding fish.

After a full day of trying just about everything in my fly box, I was pretty well discouraged. I still do not know what prompted me to it, but the next morning I tried a large buck caddis tied on a heavy 4X stout steelhead fly hook. At first, it too yielded nothing, but I couldn't think of anything else to change to, so I started experimenting with the retrieve.

As a rule, Rainbow trout like a retrieve with some action in it, but this day no variation in action would entice a strike. Even Ray Bergman's hand twist retrieve failed. So I idled the fly, just letting it hang in the current. If I let it hang there too long, the heavy fly would finally settle to the bottom. When I felt this happen, I slowly picked up a foot of line and let it hang there again. Bang, a fish took it while it was stationary but slowly settling. This was the way to go this day, I thought. It was the first strike in over a day of hard fishing. And so it was. This method worked so well I was into several fish an hour. I was in the catch and release business, so I changed the fly to a dun colored fly on an equally heavy hook. It worked just as well. Pattern made no difference. The fly had to be large and bushy, and not moving.

It made sense after thinking the days events over. The colder water had made the fish lethargic. They weren't going to move very far for food; it didn't interest them that much. They were laying on the bottom sheltered from the current as much as possible. But, if a large enough morsel hesitated near them long enough, they were willing to spend enough energy to take it.

In the years since that first experiment, I have met these same conditions several times, and this seems to be the best way to go after trout whose normal seasonal habits have been interrupted by unseasonal cold water.

Area streams said safe for swimming

Most Oregon streams and rivers are safe for swimming, reports the Department of Environmental Quality.

However, DEQ laboratory tests show bacteriological conditions make water contact activities potentially hazardous in the Tualatin River system from Gaston to the river's mouth, Johnson Creek, Marys River below Philomath, Pudding River, Columbia Slough, Rickreall Creek, Bear Creek and the Malheur River.

All other streams and rivers in the state are bacteriologically safe for water sports, but swimmers should avoid areas within about 100 yards of a sewage treatment plant or industrial outfall as a precaution against the possibility of a malfunctioning treatment system.

DEQ also reports that no

Lady golfers hold picnic

On Ladies' Day, June 14, members of the Mt. Hood Golf Club held a no host picnic at the home of Dolly Fouch, after playing members of the Dalles Country Club.

In the 18-hole category, Kathy Wright placed first in the low gross scores, with an 81. Second was Cheryl Darr with 90, and Marge Jarvis was third with 93.

First in low net scores was Kay Thomson with 71. Kathy Adskim placed second with 73, and Lou Kipp and Jo Taylor tied for third with 74.

K.P. for the 18-holers was Barbara Eldredge. Marge Olsgard took first for putts, with a 33. Doris Casey, Marty stream waters can be considered safe for drinking, because even in isolated areas there is a chance of recent, local contamination from upstream uses.

Last year, tourists spent $544 million in Las Vegas, compared with $221 million in 1967.

It is estimated that 100 million plant and animal species have become extinct since the world began.
