WELCOME BACK, KOTTER

Comedian Gabriel Kaplan especially brings his comic talents to the fore in this week's edition of "Welcome Back, Kotter," repeating Thursday, July 13, on ABC-TV.

In this episode, the opener of a two-part installment called "There's No Business," city high school teacher Gabe Kotter (Kaplan), who always does manage to see the funny side of life, is encouraged by his wife Julie (Marcia Strassman) and students to try out his skills as a comedian in a rowdy local nightclub. Everyone's pulling for Gabe except assistant principal Woodman (John Sylvester White), who thinks the idea is a cockeyed one.

However, his first appearance is less than a smashing success. In fact, he bombs out and it's up to the sweatshops to come to the rescue of their favorite teacher and save the act.

The sweatshops include Robert Hegyes as Epstein, Lawrence-Hilton Jacobs as Washington, Ron Palillo as Horshack and John Travolta as Barbario.

IN THE MATTER OF KAREN ANN QUINLAN

When the parents of a young woman learn that there is no chance for their daughter to recover from her comatose condition, they determine to remove her destiny from the hands of medical science and place it in the hands of God, encountering unexpected medical and legal opposition, in "In the Matter of Karen Ann Quinlan," to be repeated on NBC Saturday Night at the Movies, July 15.

Brian Keith (second from right) and Piper Laurie (right) star as the parents, while John Friedrich (left) and Stephanie Zimbalist (second from left) play the victim's brother and sister in the drama, based on the headline-making case of a young New Jersey woman who at the age of 21 lapsed into a coma on April 14, 1975.

As time passes with each visit to the hospital, the Quinlans face the reality that Karen Ann's condition is deteriorating and that her life is being sustained by sophisticated medical machinery. After months of soul-searching, they decide that their daughter's inevitable death should be natural and that her life should not be artificially prolonged by technology.
