

Missionary convention set next week

A missionary convention will be held at the Sandy Assembly of God beginning this Sunday, Jan. 11, at 10:45 p.m.

Special guest speaker for this service will be the Rev. James Kessler. Kessler and his wife, Delta, have ministered in Ghana since 1954. They have witnessed many changes in the country during this time and have seen the national church grow and develop into an autonomous organization with African leadership.

The featured speaker for the Sunday evening service at 6 p.m. will be the Rev. James Macauley, missionary to Nigeria.

The Rev. Alex Chevchuck, pastor of the Russian Church at Hubbard will be the special speaker next Wednesday at 7 p.m.

The convention will climax next Sunday, Jan. 18, with the Rev. Jerry Robeson and his wife, Carol, who have been ministering in Costa Rica since 1973. He will present special music on his

Council to study parking ordinance

The city of Sandy will investigate the possibility of amending its code to reduce the number of parking spaces necessary for senior citizen complexes in the city. Averytt and Ginny Brewster have requested that the city council consider allowing their senior citizen project a variance to the number of off-street parking spaces needed. Currently, the city says two spaces are needed for apartments. The Brewsters would like that lowered to 1.5 to 1.7 spaces. They are planning construction of a 20-apartment complex just south of Cedar Plaza and north of McCormick Drive with financing through the Farm Home Administration.

council Monday to grant a variance or amend the ordinance to be more specific for different types of housing, such as one-bedroom two-bedroom and retirement complexes. She contends that a blanket ordinance does not adequately serve the needs of individual types of dwellings.

If the Brewsters are required to leave two spaces per apartment, she said, "it sort of squishes the buildings and eliminates trees." They plan an open courtyard, but that could be eliminated by the larger parking lot.

She said that 44 people have signed up for spaces in the complex.

Following a study, prepared by city staff, the council is expected to initiate some sort of formal action at its Jan. 15 meeting.

The council learned that the Department of Environmental Quality has agreed to modify the city's existing waste discharge permit by deleting the reference to limitations of 500,000 gallons per day and strictly limiting the discharge to the biochemical oxygen demand and solids that are limited to the existing permit.

If the city can meet the quality standards as outlined in its permit, then it will be able to exceed the 500,000 gallon per day limitation. Bob Hornsby has indicated that the plant would meet those standards, which would mean the city could have additional connections to those previously projected under the permit.

The council welcomed two new members at its Monday meeting. Calvin Jones and Tim Ward were sworn in as councilmen, along with incumbent Jim Duff. Mayor Ruth Loundree also took the oath of office. In its first course of business, the council unanimously selected Deane Wesselink as council president.

The council appointed Dick Harrison and Gus De Paepe to the Sandy Planning Commission. They replace Ward and Joe Cejka. Marian James and Ben Salisbury were also re-appointed. Frank Fox of Sandy DeCor was named an advisor to replace Harrison.

GED class offers testing preparation

A recent survey of students who left Oregon high schools before graduation shows that nearly 83 percent of the early-leavers intend to pursue their education.

In Sandy, one method began this week.

The winter term of classes to prepare students for the General Education Development (GED) testing program opened Monday, but it is not too late to enroll. The class features open enrollment, according to its teacher, Eileen Houser. Therefore, students may join the class at any time.

It is held each Monday and Wednesday evening from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. in Room 13 at Cedar Ridge School.

The classes prepare students for the test or help those still in school brush up on their skills in five areas: reading, writing, mathematics, science and social studies.

According to Houser, one man completed the GED requirements in one term, as a result of the Sandy classes in the fall.

The free class will run until March 11 and offers some side benefits for enrollees. A student body card for Mount Hood Community College, which sponsors the class, is available to each student. It entitles the bearer to free swimming, a library card and discounts on haircuts, according to Houser.

Those who enroll in the class are also eligible for a $5 discount when they take the GED exam. And taking the exam isn't that risky.

For more information on the classes, call the MHCC campus office of GED, 667-7333, or call Houser, 668-4964. To register, just show up at the Cedar Ridge School Monday at 6:30 p.m.
