The Mullavey audiences don't see

Greg Mullavey played the immature aficionado of infidelity as the husband of Fernwood's "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman," the unemployed jealous husband and father who almost destroyed his family in the recent highly rated NBC-TV movie "Children of Divorce" and has appeared in such paeans to the pleasures of hearth and home as "Bob & Carol and Ted & Alice" and "The Love Machine."

Not only that, but in the experimental NBC series, "Number 96," he was cast as Max Quintzel, a moderately successful architect and moderately successful male half of a moderately successful marriage. Max and his wife, Marion (Randee Heller), have decided that some carefully choreographed extramarital high jinks will put the zest back in their dreary marriage.

However, all of these roles are examples of casting Mullavey against type.

"I think we've all fantasized about open marriage, but I just don't believe it works," says Mullavey, who has been married to actress Meredith MacRae for 11 years. They have a 6-year-old daughter, Allison, and reside in a newly refurbished 60-year-old Spanish hacienda.

"When you have two actors in a family, there's always a minor threat of envy. Sometimes one will be working and the other unemployed. As it is, actors are a little more volatile than most people and have their nerve endings on the surface. Meredith and I try to solve any problems we might have by talking about our feelings. It's important not to deny them, even if that means risking conflict over their exposure."
