

Water stations recording all-time low

Most precipitation measurement stations in Oregon are recording all-time lows.

According to the Water Resources Department, however, Oregon's water supply is much better this year than it was in the drought year of 1977.

Not only is the present snowpack measurement equal to Oregon's total snowpack of 1977, but estimated future season streamflows for representative Oregon streams are up 31 to 45 percent over 1977.

Water supplies for most Oregon water users dependent on stored water will be adequate, although some reservoirs will not fill completely because of expected low streamflow this spring and summer.

Below-normal streamflow forecasts are not generally as poor as during the severe shortage in 1977 due, in part, to adequate soil moisture received as a result of fall rain and a relatively wet December. According to a Feb. 1, report issued by the Soil Conservation Service and Water Resources Department, Oregon streamflows are expected to be 58 to 80 percent of their 15-year average as compared to 13 to 49 percent forecasted in February of 1977.

Regionally, the Columbia Basin's heavy precipitation in December provided above average storage in the Upper Columbia reservoirs for power generation and other uses. The flow of the Lower Columbia River at The Dalles is forecast for 78 percent of normal for the year.

Castors celebrate 50th year

Al and Eva Castor of Sandy were honored with a surprise party on Valentine's Day commemorating their 50th wedding anniversary.

The couple was married Feb. 12, 1931 in Wewoka, Okla.

Following an open house, a family dinner was held at the Melvin Haneberg Community Center. In attendance were many friends and relatives, including two grandchildren, two great-grandchildren and a great-great-nephew.

Pictures and tapes of the party were presented to the Castors at the end of the day.

Also in attendance were Dale and Pauline Hallum of Seminole, Okla. Dale Hallum lived with the Castors for many years.

Eva Castor's sister and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Dreury of Visalia, Calif. were also there.

Rasmussen an Eagle Scout

Dale Rasmussen, 17, of Sandy has earned the rank of Eagle Scout, the highest rank in the Boy Scouts of America.

Rasmussen officially received the title last week at a ceremony at Firwood School. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Dick Rasmussen of Sandy.

He has been a senior patrol leader, instructor, patrol leader, den chief and is currently assistant scoutmaster of Troop 662 in Sandy.
