'Ask Pat Hart'

The Sandy Post this week begins a new local advice column, written by a local resident for local readers with problems. She will remain anonymous, preferring to write under the pen name, Pat Hart. She says she's played big sister to friends and acquaintances for years and genuinely enjoys helping people. So now she'll begin responding to written questions from readers, addressed to "Ask Pat Hart," co Sandy Post, P.O. Box 68, Sandy, OR 97055. Pat promises to read and answer ALL letters, and — yes — you may remain anonymous, if you choose...

Dear Mrs. Hart:

My seven-year-old son has a bed-wetting problem. He can handle it when he makes an effort to try, but there are times when he is worn out from playing hard all day or he may drink too much liquid before bed time and then he wets his bed. I've tried all the usual methods many times, and he is not really being helped by them. We are just going around in circles. I love him and want to put this problem behind us as soon as I can. Maybe some of your readers have a solution.

He is on unemployment and hasn't found even a promise of a job or any hope that his former employer will be able to put him back to work. He thinks a military career would be a good move for him. Please, how can I talk him out of this? What about me and the children?

problems with the right attitude, and remember - No goals, no game, no score!)

Dear Ms. Hart:

I am a 75 year old senior citizen, and I live alone. I have a collection of gold in the form of rings, lockets and antique pieces. I need to sell my collection to pay some long over-due bills. How can I get a fair, honest price? I am afraid to let a buyer come to my home. Thank you

ADVICE COLUMN

Dear Mrs. L.R.:

A few years ago I had the same problem. I used sleep teaching, a simple method of using the subconscious mind. When my son fell asleep, I would go to his bedside and tell him I loved him and that he is very important in my life. Because he always sleeps in a warm, dry bed, I told him, he needs to wake up in plenty of time to use the bathroom. Then he will return to his wonderful, warm, dry bed. I said this each night for two weeks, and our problem disappeared with only two occurrences during the following three weeks. The problem never again surfaced during the rest of his childhood.

Best wishes to you.

Sincerely,
Pat Hart

Dear Mrs. Hart:

My husband and I have been married happily for

Dear Mrs. R.S.:

Your husband is on a direct track. A military career is one of the best bargains offered today. I feel he is showing his love for his family, inasmuch as he wants to provide the best possible way he can in these inflationary times. My suggestion to you is this: Make two lists, one for civilian life advantages and one for military life advantages. Call any military recruiter and be sure to ask about family benefits such as housing, medical, insurance, travel and available loans when your husband is discharged. You owe it to your husband to check into it. Besides, what have you got to lose? Work with your husband, not against him.

Sincerely,
Pat Hart

(P.S. You may solve all your

Dear Mrs. B.R.:

My heart goes out to you and other folks in this position. For your immediate benefit and other in this position — here is one way.

Take your collection two three or more legitimate jewelry stores, whether they buy or not. Explain to them that you're not selling right now, but would like their appraisal. If they are not buying (most jewelry stores do not), they will be happy to share their professional knowledge with you. Get three appraisals, so you have a medium to judge from. Call the people you owe money to and bargain with your collection to cancel out your debts. I did this myself during hard times, and it worked for me.

Sincerely,
Pat Hart

(P.S. Sometimes appraisals reveal staggering results. You just might cancel out your bills and have enough left over to take a vacation. My thoughts go with you.)
