Oregonians seek national bottle bill

Thurs., March 19, 1981 (Sec. 1) SANDY (Ore.) POST-5

The Oregon Congressional delegation appears confident they may be able to gain approval for a national bottle bill by the 97th Congress.

"We have a better chance this session than at any time since Oregon pioneered the first deposit law," said Rep. Les AuCoin, who helped write the Oregon law while in the state legislature.

The bill, introduced last week in the House by AuCoin and Rep. James Jeffords, D-Vt., has been promised hearings by the Transportation and Commerce Subcommittee in the Energy and Commerce Committee.

At the same time, Sens. Mark Hatfield and Bob Packwood, Oregon's two Republican senators, introduced the "Beverage Container Re-use and Recycling Act" in the U.S. Senate, along with five co-sponsors.

AuCoin, who helped draft Oregon's landmark bottle bill 10 years ago, said opponents of the deposit law can no longer claim the system only works in small states such as Oregon and Vermont. Michigan, the first large, industrial state to approve a bottle bill, has a system that has been widely deemed a success.

Six states — Oregon, Vermont, Michigan, Connecticut, Maine and Iowa — and several cities and counties now have deposit laws.

"We can no longer afford to throw away precious energy and natural resources," Hatfield said. "It doesn't make sense from any practical standpoint to discard 100 billion beverage containers every year. These containers are re-usable and recyclable, and under our bill we will go far in protecting our environment and scarce natural resources."

Under the two proposals, a mandatory 5-cent minimum deposit would be made on beer and soft drink containers.

AuCoin said the General Accounting Office (GAO), in a recent update of its 1977 study of the effect of a national deposit law, reported that a national law would reduce the beverage container litter by more than 80 percent. The study also supports the 1977 finding that a deposit law would cut energy consumption for manufacturing, filling and transporting containers by about 30 percent.

"The throw-away ethic must stop," Hatfield said. "We need this logical incentive for individuals to renew, re-use and restore our wasted resources."

AuCoin said the GAO report indicates that a national bottle bill would create more than 80,000 new jobs. He explained that the initial increased costs to the beverage industry would be cancelled out by higher revenues from the sale of recycled materials and from unclaimed deposits.

"Beverage container legislation reduces solid waste and litter, conserves energy and creates jobs," AuCoin said. "We simply cannot continue the throwaway trend."

Review:

Tales perfect for children

by BARBARA WATERHOUSE For The Post

The Sandy Public Library has added some fairy tales by "The Story Teller" that include tapes. These mother's helpers have illustrated texts that the child can follow along with the tape.

Not only is it an excellent teaching aid, but the music by the Great Masters blends subliminally in the background. I can think of only one possible side effect. When the child is grown, he or she might be plagued by mental flashes of "The Three Little Pigs" dancing the Can Can while listening to Offenbach's "Gaité Parisienne."

These fairy tales have been laundered. The wolf doesn't get so much as a bacon sandwich — much less a suckling pig. He is not cooked in the pot when he tumbles down the chimney, but taken to the confines of the local zoo (where he is, no doubt, given a sentence of five to 10 years, but paroled in three months).

The wicked queen does not require the servant to bring back the heart of Snow White. It is the best of all possible worlds.
