

Hospital participates in mock disaster

Gresham Community Hospital was one of many area emergency facilities participating in a mock air disaster on Friday.

More than 20 "injured" persons were treated at the hospital, including two who were transported from Portland International Airport to the Gresham hospital by helicopter. Others were sent to the hospital by ambulance. Gresham Community Hospital treated six "critical" patients in the drill.

The drill featured a real fire at the airport, where fuel was fed to a burning mockup of a Boeing 727 jet. Port of Portland officials said. The "crash" was at a swampy area off of the main runways of the airport.

Gresham Community Hospital was involved with the event from 1 p.m. until 3 p.m. Friday, said Zina Smith, evening supervisor at the hospital.

"It involved the whole hospital," Smith said, "including emergency room, operating room and all the floors. Personnel from all the floors were involved."

Attendants lift "victims" from helicopter at Gresham hospital Friday.

Cannon shot reported in Boring

The shot of a cannon sent the Boring Fire Department to Rugg Road, just past 242nd Street, this Saturday. A resident reported an unknown explosion, prompting the department's response. No one was injured.

The department was also kept busy with four motor vehicle accidents and six first aid calls in the Boring area during the week of April 9-14. At 2:48 a.m. Saturday, a car driven by William Pendleton missed a curve at Orient Drive and Waybill Road. There were no injuries.

Two other accidents were classified non-injury.
