

Super dishwasher may liven up life's most mundane chore

One of the most mundane chores of a housewife is washing dishes.

Women have been doing dishes since the days of the cavemen, when it simply meant swishing the food off the rock. Over the years, the job has picked up little in the way of esteem and less in the way of variety.

The whole process could be broken down into four stages, but the sequence can't be rearranged. It remains scrape, wash, rinse and dry.

Since the dishes had to be washed and put away in the same manner, the only way to diversify the job was to add more people forming an assembly line or, at least, alternating with another member of the family to break the boredom.

Time marches on! The invention of the electric dishwasher was, of course, meant to emancipate women from the bondage of dishes. It was to free them to run outside after meals and play with the children, listen to the birds sing — then wash the car and mow the lawn.

The dishwasher did get women out of the kitchen faster, but it had one or two hangups. The first step of scraping wasn't eliminated, the machine could only wash, rinse and dry. If the dishes were not hand-scraped, the machine had a nasty habit of plugging up its drainage system.

Somebody still had to put the dishes back into the cupboard, so basically, most dishwashers became additional storage space. Despite the advertising campaign, women found out that dishwashers could not scrape baked macaroni out of casserole dishes or scour stew from a Dutch oven.

Women soon returned to the kitchen and stood up to their elbows in dishwasher once again, doing the pots and pans while their automatic washer did the dishes. It then occurred to some that they could wash all their dishes and pans in less than half the water the machine was using, and in about the same amount of time.

It boiled down to a matter of priorities — which was worth more, the time or the electric bill?

Manufacturers found the push to put an automatic dishwasher in every rental and home was not enough. Coupled with modern technology, they invented the wizard washer, a machine capable of washing dishes 25 different ways. Now that's incredible!

Each computerized unit comes complete with a certificate to a university for a mini course in computer programming. A few dollars extra will hook the washer up to the data processing center in Washington D.C., making the dishwasher, rather than the TV, the home's focal point.

A machine of this caliber has made the humdrum job of dishwashing an art. People will gather in kitchens just to watch this finely tuned instrument go through its cycles. Women will bring their dainty tea cups and fine china over to run through the Delicate cycle. Children will be amazed at how the Brush and Blow cycle renews a paper plate to new. The Spit and Polish cycle will put new life into silverware and brilliance into silver service sets.

The 23rd cycle is a peaceful rinse. The cool refreshing waters will descend over the dishes, filling cups to overflowing. The owner will fear no evil after this cycle and the washer will dwell in her home forever. For a little extra, the washer will play a cassette of religious music.

This top-of-the-line model will be unaffordable by most, a novelty for the rich and totally useless by anyone when the power is out.

That's not incredible, that's a fact.
