St. Jude's celebrates special week

President Ronald Reagan has proclaimed this week, May 10-17, "National Nursing Home Week" and to honor the residents of St. Jude's Home, special musical activities and outings have taken place during the week.

A group of 10 residents last weekend were treated to a matinee showing of "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," through the efforts of Macy Brader and the Sandy Community Players.

Residents also made several visits around the community to show them their community. They toured Sandy City Hall and the Public Library, Oral Hull Park, the Oregon Cand Farm and the new Clackamas Town Center.

Musical entertainment was also scheduled each day. A Sandy High School musical group and the Estacada Girl's Choir put on a musical revue Monday. The Gresham Hot Shots, the Jolly Band from Estacada and Dennis Grubs, an organist, also presented a musical tribute to the residents of St. Jude's Home throughout the week.

Pioneers plan speech on emigrants

Chris MacDonald, president of the Milwaukie Historical Society and curator of its museum, will speak before the Oregon History Series Group Tuesday, May 26, at 2 p.m. in the Beaver Room of the Oregon Historical Society, 1230 S.W. Park Ave., Portland.

As a teenaged girl, MacDonald fled Prussia with her brother and pushed her belongings on a bicycle before the advancing Russian army to Allied-occupied West Germany. In doing so she left her parents behind the Iron Curtain. Her family had been prominent in textile manufacturing.

She has learned of the confiscation of her family's factory and the non-use of her father's knowledge and talents since the Communist occupation.

Upon settling in Milwaukie with her husband, William MacDonald, an attorney, she has engaged in civic service and cultural activities. Her talk is entitled "A Modern Emigrant's Views of the Oregon Pioneer

The public is invited.

Book review:

Novel traces life, times of Darwin

by BARBARA WATERHOUSE
For The Post

A complete, yet brief, review of "The Origin," by Irving Stone, is not possible. This biographical novel of Charles Darwin is 731 pages long. Stone is a master writer and he loves minute description. Each character and scene is as sharp as a photograph.

My favorite section in the book was the enthralling time he spent as a naturalist aboard the "Beagle," a British naval vessel, whose mission was to survey the coasts of South America. Those five intense years gave him the material for a lifetime of study and earth-shaking work.

In the Argentine he found the remains of mastodons and other extinct animals. In the Andes he examined a fossilized forest lying under sediments deposited by an ancient sea. In the Galapagos he noted that the carapaces of the great tortoises differed from island to island.

He saw earthquakes in Chile, and volcanoes that led him to consider causes for the changes in animal species.

He believed in the evidence of his own senses, no matter how it might conflict with established views, but he had not intended to publish during his lifetime.

Darwin was jolted into action in 1855 when he read an article by Alfred Russel Wallace, "On the Law Which Has Regulated the Introduction of New Species."

Wallace was working the same field which he had begun in 1837. In 1855 Wallace was only 32 years old and he had yet to write on the Malay archipelago.

Darwin's friends persuaded him to publish "On the Origin of Species," although he was frightened about the reaction in a Christian nation, such as Great Britain. He had no appetite for controversy.

Thomas Huxley, Sir Charles Lyell and Joseph Hooker defended him.

In 1865 he finished "Variation of Animals and Plants Under Domestication." His concluding remarks contained this admonition: "If an omnipotent and omniscient Creator ordains everything and foresees everything, we are brought face to face with a difficulty as insoluble as is that of free will and predestination."

The Bike Rodeo was initiated to develop student awareness of safe bicycle riding practices.
