Women artists

Tracing the achievements of women artists from the late Renaissance to the 20th century, "The Artist Was a Woman" will air on PBS Monday, May 25. (Local times may vary; check listings.)

Jane Alexander narrates the program. The artists to be examined include such women as the little-known Sofonisba Anguissola from the Renaissance to the well-known Georgia O'Keeffe from the 20th century.

The hour-long documentary will focus on the artists' works with still photos of places they studied and painted. The special will blend quotations from the actual writings of the women with comments from contemporary critics and admirers. The music on the program will reflect the style of each period and, like the art, is composed by women.

Backstage talent

Movie stars aren't the only ones who get to act at NBC.

Even the unsung, behind-the-scenes heroes will get a chance to show their talent in front of the camera as NBC presents "The Second Annual NBC and Only NBC Talent Showcase" on "Tomorrow Coast-to-Coast," starring Tom

Snyder and Rona Barrett.

The NBC employees who can sing, dance, yodel, play piano, run a flea circus, do stand-up comedy, spin dishes or fall over creatively will have a shot at appearing on the program, to air immediately following the Tuesday, May 26 edition of "The Tonight Show."

Disappearing nurses

American hospitals are experiencing a life-or-death crisis that can't be remedied by new technology and medical breakthroughs. A shortage of nurses in this country's hospitals is causing this dangerous situation, according to a CBS News special report "Nurse, Where Are You?" to air May 28.

"It is the nurse, not the doctor, who is our first line of defense against the illness we are fighting," says CBS News correspondent Marlene Sanders, who anchors the program. Yet, "ninety percent of American hospitals are reporting a serious shortage of nurses."

The report reveals that less than half of the nation's 1.4 million nurses stay in hospitals for the length of their career, and fewer people are entering the nursing profession.
