The curious stopped by The Spar Tree in Eagle Creek Tuesday to watch investigators from the Estacada Rural Fire Department and State Fire Marshal's office sift through the ashes as they attempted to find the cause of the $250,000 blaze.

Early-morning blaze guts Spar Tree

An early-morning fire Tuesday gutted and destroyed The Spar Tree Restaurant and Lounge in Eagle Creek. Cause of the blaze is under investigation. According to Chief Elmer Christenson of the Estacada Rural Fire Department, the blaze began at 1:56 a.m. "When I arrived on the scene, the whole back end was involved," he said. Firefighters from the Estacada, Sandy and Boring fire districts battled the flames for more than a half hour before they were under control, he said. Christenson said the building was "just about a total loss" and estimated the damage to the structure at approximately $250,000.

"We have no idea of cause," he said Tuesday. However, investigators from Estacada and the state fire marshal's office are sifting through the ashes to determine what set off the blaze.

Fire personnel were on the scene until 5 a.m. Tuesday morning mopping up after the fire. Christenson said nearly 30 firefighters battled the flames.

Book review

Book maps avenues of mind's experience

by BARBARA WATERHOUSE For The Post

Some book titles can spark a chain reaction in the mind, and "Maps of the Mind," by Charles Hampden-Turner, was such a book title for me. I instantly recalled, among other associated ideas, some words that I had read years ago.

"Many of us who walk to and fro upon our usual tasks are prisoners drawing mental maps of escape. Some of the men, with maps in their heads, develop the power to draw the outside world within and lose us there. Some venture even to remake reality."

Jorge Luis Borges or, perhaps, Loren Eiseley. They are not quoted in "Maps of the Mind," but it is a perfect description of the contents of the book. Also, the thought process that I experienced is illustrated in Map 27 - "The Bisociating Mind."

Hampden-Turner differentiates among more than 50 main concepts, including those of Freud, Jung, Fromm, Marx, Erikson, Piaget, Maslow, Russell, Buber, Chomsky and Marcuse.

Each idea is described clearly and illustrated in diagrams. The author creates a composite picture of the way our minds work and the processes of human thought in science, philosophy, myth, poetry, cinema, literature and art.

Charles Hampden-Turner has taught at Harvard,

Brandeis University, the Tavistock Institute in London, et al. He has written a number of books, and has won many awards.

This is a brilliant and absorbing reference book, and it should be in your personal library. It is available at Sandy Public Library.
