Dowsers' convention set

The fifth annual Dowsers' Convention will be held this weekend, July 17-19, at Milo Melver State Park just west of Estacada.

The convention is expected to draw participants from all over Oregon, as well as neighboring states and Canada.

Dowsing is the art of earth energy interaction with the human mind and body's recognition response system. The most obvious example is water witching, or the use of hand-held sticks to discover the location of water beneath the earth's surface.

A number of demonstrations are planned at the convention, which will begin at 9 a.m. each day.

There will be exhibits of dowsing instruments, demonstrations of methods, instruction and information including a lending library for members, unusual information on energy and the environment and other events.

Camping sites are available for overnight visitors.

There will be campfires, speakers and slideshows in the evening at the convention.

The public is invited to the demonstrations, lectures and slide shows.
