Cosby's kids

Bill Cosby's talents as a stand-up comedian, television and nightclub entertainer serve him well when he pursues his other interest — education.

"A teacher has to be some kind of actor," Cosby says, "because kids are the toughest audience of all."

Cosby spends a lot of time proving that an actor can be a teacher as well. Cosby's philosophy of "learning with laughter" has brought education and comedy together in the form of the Cosby Kids, a group that includes Fat Albert, Weird Harold, Dumb Donald and Mushmouth.

"The Fat Albert Halloween Special," a half-hour animated holiday special to be rebroadcast Tuesday, Oct. 27, on CBS, is just one example of how Cosby uses his talents in association with artists and writers to create an entertainment special that also educates.

'Blues' awards

"Hill Street Blues," NBC's humorous police drama series which garnered eight Emmy awards, will return to NBC Thursday, Oct. 29, with the first original episode of the '81-'82 season.

Among the eight Emmys won by "Hill Street Blues" was the award for outstanding drama series. Other awards went to Daniel J. Travanti, as outstanding lead actor in a drama series; Barbara Babcock, as outstanding lead actress in a drama series; Michael Conrad, as outstanding supporting actor in a drama series; Steven Bochco and Michael Kozoll, for outstanding writing in a drama series; Robert Butler, for outstanding directing in a drama series. "Hill Street" completed the awards sweep by winning in the film sound editing and cinematography categories.

New Davis film

Bette Davis stars in "A Piano for Mrs. Cimino," a new motion picture for television now filming in Vancouver, B.C., for future broadcast on CBS.

Also starring in the drama are Alexa Kenin, Penny Fuller, Christopher Guest, Keenan Wynn and George Hearn.

Miss Davis plays a widow — diagnosed as senile by her doctor and deemed incompetent by the court — who fights to regain control of her estate and her life.

Star interviews

"Entertainment This Week," the hour-long weekend edition of the syndicated "Entertainment Tonight," presents some of the country's most popular personalities this weekend, Oct. 31. (Local times may vary; check listings.)

In the seventh edition of "Entertainment This Week," the interviewees include television and film star Alan Alda, who talks about what's important to him; Dolly Parton, who belts out a few tunes and talks about her film career; Bob Hope, who speaks on people, politics and politicians; Brooke Shields, who, away from the movie and commercial cameras, reveals that she's more like the girl next door than viewers might expect; and Kenny Rogers, who wows his fans in concert
