

Scouts ready local area for Good Turn

Boy Scouts and Cub Scouts in the Sandy area are doing their 'Good Turn' as they deliver Goodwill bags to local homes in preparation for the upcoming 31st annual Good Turn Day.

Scouts from Troop 288 and Packs 248 and 576 of Sandy will retrace their steps through neighborhoods next Saturday, Nov. 7, to pick up bags of reusable donations. These donations of clothing, household goods, toys, books and small appliances supply the raw materials to employ and train the disabled at Goodwill Industries of Oregon.

Good Turn Day is sponsored by the Columbia Pacific Council of Boy Scouts of America, Rotary Club of East Portland and Goodwill Industries of Oregon. These groups plan and coordinate efforts to collect thousands of pounds of donations Saturday.

The materials collected that day will create a backlog of goods to provide employment and training for disabled persons during the winter months when the usually-high level of donations decreases.

With the planning complete, the Sandy troop and two Sandy packs are distributing bags to homes this week. They will collect filled bags placed on porches of homes by residents next Saturday.

The Sandy collection point is the Odd Fellow Hall, 3885 Proctor Blvd.

Board member appointed to fill vacancy

The Sandy Elementary School Board last Thursday evening filled its membership with the appointment of Sharon Cox to fill the position vacated by Paulie Jagosh who moved from the district.

Cox, 38, was selected unanimously from among six candidates who applied for the position. She is a homemaker and the mother of four children.

She will serve for the balance of this fiscal year, until June 30, 1982. The one year remaining on the term will be placed before voters during this spring's election.

Silver Tones fill halls with music

by DAN DILLON

The halls of the Sandy Senior Center have been filled with the sounds of high-spirited music lately. Now its creators want to take their show on the road.

The Sandy Silver Tones, nine musicians ranging in age from 65 to 88, entertained Tuesday at the center's annual Halloween party, filling the center with strains of "You Made Me Love You" and "Danny Boy," but the enthusiastic group would like to spread their musical cheer around.

The group formed in October 1980, according to Community Services Director Sandra Potter Marquardt, but the musical talents the members brought were fostered long before that.

Marie Schwartz, the only Silver Tones member who played in the band when seniors met at the Sandy Odd Fellows' Hall, began her musical career with piano lessons in the sixth grade. She moved to the French horn in high school when she "had a high school teacher who sort of drew us in and got everyone involved."

She played the violin and, for the past four or five years, has "played at" the clavichord, her instrument with the Silver Tones.

Vivian Gates came to the Silver Tones with an appreciation for music but no idea what to play.

"I hadn't played since I was a young person," she said. "I came to the band without an instrument to see what I could do." She played the clavichord for a while, but has settled in as the xylophone player.

"There were a number of seniors at the center who had a mutual appreciation of music and had a background with instruments," said Potter Marquardt. So the staff stepped in and offered some direction and the Silver Tones were born.

She credited music teacher Joe Barr of Alpine Music with helping in the initial stages of development. But since then, the band played its own kind of music.

Mrs. Schwartz provides a lot of the sheet music, the same music she played from as a member of the Sandy High School band, but everyone has contributed pieces to the effort.

Tuesday Maurice Shuster, a piano tuner, sat in with the Silver Tones as a special guest. His fiddle playing was obviously appreciated by his fellow musicians, who encouraged him to become a full-time member.

His piano tuning keeps him busy, he said, but promised, "I'll come once in awhile, when I can."

"Just arrange your schedule around us," joked Mrs. Schwartz.

The Silver Tones have played at Sandy's Immanuel Lutheran Church, in the Mountain Days Parade and "everywhere we've been invited." They have an upcoming engagement at a church in North Portland that they practice for each Wednesday afternoon when they meet.

And the experience has been good for the members and their appreciative audiences at the Sandy center.

"It has attracted some people into the center who probably wouldn't be coming," said Potter Marquardt. "They should be proud of their achievements."

The Silver Tones are Thayus Parmenter, autoharp; Vivian Gates, xylophone; Marie Schwartz, clavichord; Mike Lamm, mandolin; Eula Markle, piano; Hazel Stoffer-Harvey, tambourine, kazoo and vocals; Lena Searles, kazoo; Avanelle Novotny, vocals, and Dorothea Bernard, vocals. Bill Knight-Weiler is band director and lends vocal support as he waves his baton.

The group isn't closed to new members.

"Anyone interested, we'd love to have," they said. "New members are always welcome."

"And so are engagements," added Mrs. Gates.

The Silver Tones think it would be just fine if Maurice Shuster became a full-time band member.

Annexation, utility rates to be studied by council

The Sandy City Council this Monday evening will consider the annexation of an industrial tract west of Sandy and a cost of living increase for sewer and water rates.

Ben Salisbury will present his plan for annexation of approximately 5.5 acres of land just west of 362nd Drive this Monday at 7:30 p.m. in council chambers at Sandy City Hall.

The property is adjacent to Sandy Industrial Park and is earmarked for industrial development, according to City Manager Roger Jordan.

The sewer and water rate increase comes on the recommendation of the Sandy budget committee and has already been applied to the current budget, Jordan said. Currently the minimum rates are $6.50 per month for sewer service at a single-family home and $7 per month for water.

In the past, development fees have paid for a large portion of the city's utility bill. However, with construction starts down, Jordan said the city will analyze residential costs to make sure that utility services can pay for themselves.

"We're probably looking at a rate analysis over the next three to six months," Jordan said, "to make sure the cost of sewer and water are self-supporting."

The alternative to higher utility costs, he said, could be reductions in the current city budget.

The first application under the city of Sandy's new zero side-yard ordinance will be considered by the Sandy Planning Commission next Wednesday evening at 7:30 p.m.

Local builder Don Clark is suggesting that duplexes be built on Bluff Road, across from the Sandy Union High School bus barn, be considered under the zero side-yard ordinance so they can be sold as separate units.

Under the ordinance, adopted this summer, both units of a duplex can be considered separate, providing for separate ownership of each unit.

The measure was initiated by the city so that people interested in owning their own residence could find more reasonably priced housing in the Sandy area.

Eagle Creek youngster critical after wreck

An Eagle Creek youth who was struck by a car last week remains in critical condition in Emanuel Hospital's intensive care unit in Portland, according to hospital officials.

Samuel A. Eggers, 13, 30522 SE Leavenworth Road, was hit by a car near the intersection of Judd Road and SE Eagle View Drive at about 3:50 p.m. Oct. 20, according to Lt. Frank Baird, of the Clackamas County sheriff's department.

The youth was sitting in the road on his bicycle when a car driven by Cathy M. Grimes, 17, 31925 SE Judd Road, rounded a curve, the lieutenant said.

A deputy's report said that Grimes was traveling about 30 miles per hour. No citations have been issued, Baird said.
