Sandy lilies to brighten Metro zoo

Metro's Washington Park Zoo in Portland has a brand new attraction—actually, a coming attraction. For now, it won't look like much more than a patch of mud, but look out for a great show next spring.

Twenty-five species of lilies were planted recently in a new lily garden, located along the walkway to the west of the sculpture garden.

Lilies are big business in Oregon. The Oregon Bulb Farm of Sandy, which donated the bulbs for the zoo's garden, is the largest lily farm in the world. Owner Ed McRae, who coordinated the planting at the zoo, said that many of the species of lily bulbs growing in Holland originated in Oregon.

The lilies will offer a continuous display of color from late May to early September. Each variety will be labeled next spring.

The lily garden will be maintained by the Northwest Lily Association.

STATE OF THE DEAD

How much do the dead know?

Eccl. 9:15 God declares that the dead know nothing. Love, hatred and envy are perished. Neither have they any more a portion forever in anything that is done under the sun.

Ps. 6:5 There is no remembrance in death.

Ps. 88:10-12 The grave is called "the land of forgetfulness."

Ps. 146:3,4 Thoughts perish at death, thus rendering a person incapable of knowing anything here on earth.

Job 3:17,18 In death "the wicked cease from troubling... There the prisoners rest together, the good, the weary and the wicked. They hear not the voice of the oppressor." If they were in a place of torment, they certainly would hear the voice of the great oppressor, Satan.

Job 3:19 The small and great are there; and the servant is free from his master. Death brings release from Satan's rule. Good and bad sleep until the resurrection.

1 Kings 2:1,2 David, a man after God's own heart, said before he died, "I go the way of all the earth." But did David go to the place of his reward when he died?

Acts 2:29,34 Peter, speaking a thousand years after the death of David, says that he is "both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day." Then he adds, "David is not ascended into the heavens." If David did not go to his place of reward at death then no one goes to either hell, purgatory or heaven.

Progress Report: Deregulation

The telephone company is in a period of transition from a regulated, natural monopoly to a company competing with many others to meet its customers' communications needs.

Recent Federal Communications Commission (FCC) decisions have deregulated terminal equipment—telephone sets, business systems, etc.—and long distance service.

The result of these rulings has been to force the nation's telephone companies to make rates compensatory for each service performed or equipment purchased. Historically, local service rates, including telephone installation rates, have been priced so as to meet the goal of "universal service," a goal that has guided the industry and its regulators for 50 years. It started in 1934 when Congress passed the Communications Act that all telephone and broadcast companies are governed by. The act established the Federal Communications Commission (FCC).

One of the purposes of the Communications Act of 1934 was to promote "universal service" to make telephone service available to as many people as possible at a reasonable rate. With this mandate in mind, the industry and its regulators agreed to certain pricing and financial concepts that have for years kept local service rates low. The most significant factor has been the revenue we get from long distance service, which amounts to approximately 65% of our total revenue. This contribution from long distance service has helped keep local rates reasonable.

Another way rates were kept low was "cost averaging." It costs a lot more to provide service to rural areas, but when these costs are averaged with those of providing service in town, telephone service becomes reasonably priced for people in rural areas.

Today, the goal of universal service has nearly been reached. But competition in long distance service and the terminal equipment market has forced us to start eliminating some historically beneficial revenue contributions to local service from long distance service and pricing concepts such as cost averaging.

At the same time, we still have an obligation to provide telephone service throughout our franchised area. We have enormous investments in equipment, and lenders and stockholders expect that they'll continue to be paid back for making those investments possible.

As the contribution from long distance revenues decreases, other services must pay for themselves, so some rates will go much higher.

An important part of this transition is a change in the way inside wiring, terminal equipment, and the labor involved in installing telephones are accounted for and priced.

In the past, terminal equipment was the phone company's, and was leased to customers. The investment in that equipment and the work involved in installing it was paid back over a period of years through local service rates and was depreciated over a period of years.

Recent FCC decisions mean, in essence, that instead of getting that investment back over a few years, phone companies will get it back from current year revenues, making telephone installations an expense just like other expenses—heat, light, gasoline, etc.

It's similar to the difference between paying cash for something or paying off a loan for the same item. When you pay cash, you have one large out-of-pocket expense, but it's paid for immediately. When you buy on credit, the out-of-pocket expense isn't so great, but you're paying smaller amounts over a longer period of time, and paying interest, too.

These are just some of the changes Continental and its customers are facing. There are sure to be more, particularly as the FCC refines and reconsiders its decisions. We are convinced that deregulation will occur and that we will be able to meet our customers' telecommunications needs.
