

Teaching use of guns is keeping man busy

by GWEN BOGH
Post Correspondent

A gun expert says that teaching a woman how to shoot is easier than teaching a man.

He said that women are easier to train because, generally, they know very little if anything about guns.

Men, on the other hand, usually have had some experience with firearms, and may feel there is little else to learn.

Jerry Marshall's interest in guns has evolved into a wholesale business, and he feels gun training is important and should be mandatory for owning a gun.

For about a year Marshall has been training people, mostly women, how to use and shoot guns, as well as informing them about gun laws in Oregon.

Most of Marshall's experience with firearms was gained through the Army, although as a child he would go hunting with his father, and at that time developed a fascination for guns.

He repaired guns for five of his nine years in the service, working as a small arms technician.

The women Marshall has trained range from housewives to nurses, bartenders and policemen. They travel from as far east as Boring and as far west as Beaverton to Marshall's classes in Milwaukie.

Marshall's gun business is his focal point in life. He's been in business three years. He maintains a second job at KPTV-12, as an assistant film librarian.

The first question Marshall asks his students is, "What do you want to use a gun for?"

He receives many answers, but they boil down to one word—protection.

Once the student has expressed why they want to use a gun, Marshall will tell them, "You only use a gun if you're shooting to kill."

He said that too many killings have resulted from someone shooting someone else only with the intention of bluffing them by shooting to wound an arm or a leg.

Marshall and his students practice at Bull Frog Park near Oregon City. He said that because practice areas are limited, some have resorted to practicing in fields where it is not allowed by law, thus alarming area residents or onlookers.

Marshall said he prefers rainy days at the park only because it lessens the number of people practicing that day. He is better able to give individual attention to students when there aren't others round to distract him.

Each of his students are taught on an individual basis. Marshall sets up appointments that are convenient to the student, which are most likely to be in the evenings or on weekends.

First and most importantly, Marshall said that he reminds students to check the gun to see if it's loaded.

"You look in the chamber before you do anything," he said.

Marshall usually uses his own guns to teach students. They include a .22-caliber Ruger automatic, a .38-caliber Smith and Wesson, and a .45-caliber Colt automatic.

"I don't recommend pistols to people," Marshall said, although some women he's taught have gotten permits to carry firearms in their purses.

If a woman carries a gun in a purse, and it gets snatched, "All you've done is donated a $100 gun." Any gun left round the house is dangerous if not kept out of the reach of children, he pointed out.

Because of the crime rate, many people feel they need to protect their families and homes by purchasing guns. The seriousness of gun ownership is not taken lightly by Marshall.

While acknowledging the pros and cons of the issue, Marshall said, "Instead of gun control, I'd like to see people controlled."
